CITY GRIEVES WITH HORRIFIED NATION

Carmel responds with patriotism

By TAMARA GRIPPI

THE MOOD at Carmel City Hall was somber Sept. 11 as city council members sat down for their regular meeting just a few hours after watching the unfathomable destruction in New York City on TV.

"What a difference a day makes," said Carmel Mayor Sue McCloud. "We were here last night in this room with a lot of joy and pleasure [after approving a plan to fund Sunset Center's renovation]. After the horrific events of today, there's a big mood change."

At the Sept. 11 meeting, McCloud asked for a moment of silence for the victims of the terrorist attacks in New York and Washington D.C., particularly recognizing the efforts of the police and firefighters who lost their lives in rescue attempts.

In the days following the news that hijacked planes had been steered into the Pentagon and the World Trade Center,

Thankful to be alive and longing for home

By KIRSTIE WILDE

THE SANCTUARY of Carmel beckons to Mike Carini as he sits in a Manhattan hotel room, breathing the acrid, smoky air for the third day and wondering whether his fifth airplane reservation on Sunday will finally take him home.

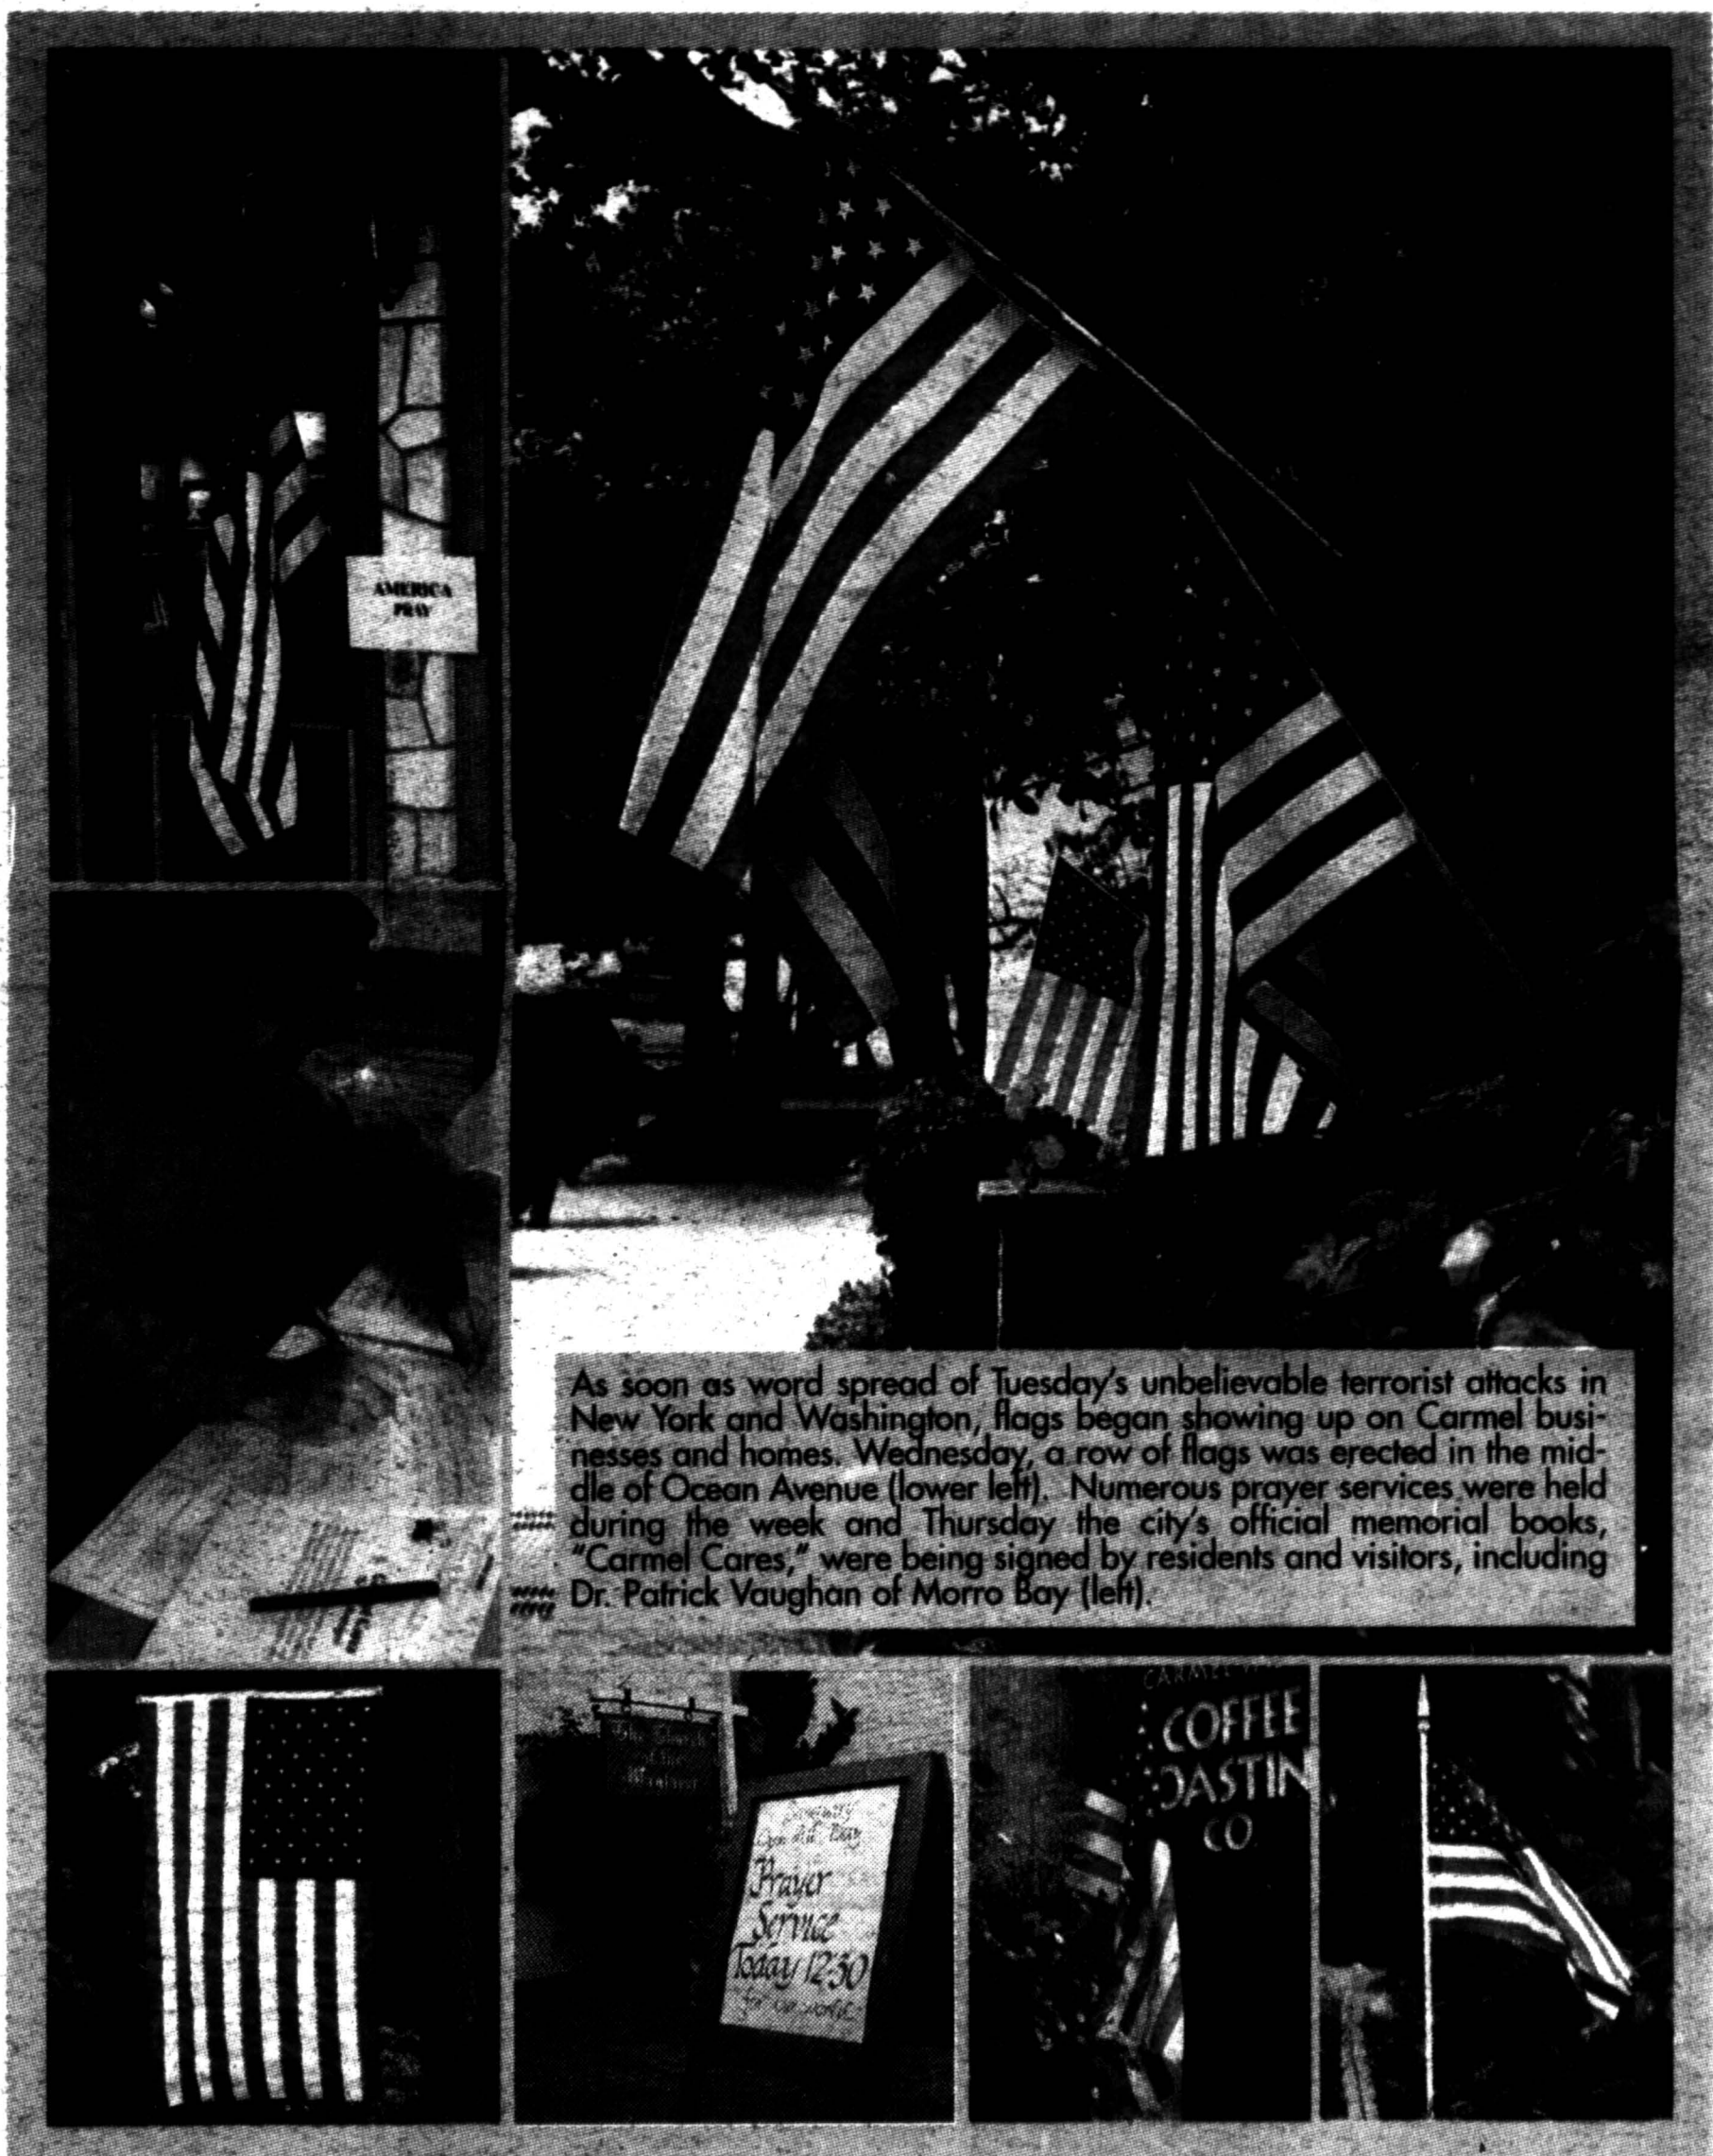

Safe in Carmel is where Carol and Dave Hatton wish their daughter, Lindsay, was now, instead of camping in the home of a family friend in New York City. She's been stuck there since Tuesday because her own Manhattan apartment is in the war zone and her office at the World Financial Center — across the street from the World Trade Center — may be uninhabitable.

Jason Matthams, son of John and Sharon Matthams of Pebble Beach, is a fine arts student at New York University. He said nothing is the same as it was when he moved to the Big City just three weeks ago.

Keeping your cool

Lindsay Hatton, a 22-year-old graduate of All Saints' School and Santa Catalina, had just arrived in a cab outside her office Tuesday morning when she looked up and saw smoke rising from tower one.

See SECURITY page 23A

As soon as word spread of Tuesday's unbelievable terrorist attacks in New York and Washington, flags began showing up on Carmel businesses and homes. Wednesday, a row of flags was erected in the middle of Ocean Avenue (lower left). Numerous prayer services were held during the week and Thursday the city's official memorial books, "Carmel Cares," were being signed by residents and visitors, including Dr. Patrick Vaughan of Morro Bay (left).

Schools offer solace, safety

By MARY BROWNFIELD

CARMEL STUDENTS faced with images and news of the brutal terrorist attacks Sept. 11 received support and comfort at their schools this week as teachers and counselors listened to their concerns and worked to reinforce a sense of safety.

"For students there is safety in seeing the routine — seeing that yes, school goes on; yes, we can take care of you; yes, this is a very safe, secure environment," said Carmel Middle School counselor Kay Anderson. "They were wonderful in just supporting one another in this terrible tragedy and reaching out to other students who were more upset."

Several students, having seen the morning news before coming to school, went straight from the bus to the counseling office, according to Anderson. Others were more upset because they had family members on the East Coast and were worried about them. Anderson and another school counselor each saw five to 10 students the day of the disaster.

"Students need to talk about things like that and get them out in the open, to talk about their feelings," Anderson said. "Adults

Worship on day of mourning

By MARY BROWNFIELD

CARMEL CHURCHES have responded to the President's declaration of Friday as a national day of mourning by planning a combined worship service slated for noon at All Saints Episcopal Church at Dolores and Ninth.

"There will be a time of prayer and reflection in light of what has happened this week," said the Reverend Madeline Elsea of Carmel's Church of the Wayfarer. "It's open to anyone who wants to come for prayer, reflection and singing."

The service was organized by clergy from All Saints, Church of the Wayfarer and the Community Church on Carmel Valley Road, according to Elsea. Child care will be available.

Carmel Presbyterian Church at Ocean and Junipero will also hold its own prayer service at noon Sept. 14, according to a spokeswoman there.

All week, churches have met the needs of many in Carmel by throwing wide their doors and offering extra services to help people deal with their grief over Tuesday's horrific events.

Sunset Theater contractor given go-ahead as council agrees to more funding

By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS

BACK ON track after three months of negotiating and planning by the city and private fundraisers, The Sunset Center Theater Project was given a vote of confidence, a call to move forward and, most importantly, about $5 million of additional funding at a special city council meeting this week.

Because of a totally unexpected $3.3 million shortfall in renovation funds, commencement of the long-awaited construction came to a skidding halt when bids were opened on June 21. The lowest bid — startlingly high at almost $20 million — came as a “rude shock,” in the words of City Administrator Rich Guillen. Originally, total cost for the theater renovation was estimated at $16.65 million.

Before a packed chamber, the city council announced Monday that it would take immediate action to meet the deadline of Sept. 18 for accepting the bid of Roebelen Construction.

The fundraising group, The Sunset Center for the Arts, announced they have to date raised $11.65 million and that they will try to bring in an additional $1 million toward the project.

The city is increasing its long-term borrowing for the project from $5 million to $6.45 million and will take out an additional bridge loan of $2.56 million.

The bonds will be put on sale to the public on Oct. 9, according to Attorney Chick Adams of Jones Hall, which is representing the city.

No further cuts possible

Although the building committee had gone over architectural plans meticulously to determine where cuts could be made, Guillen said the city looked for even more cuts, “trying to keep it a first class project, but without some of the frills.”

However, project manager Bill Camille and a design committee determined no further cuts could be made “without cutting the project itself,” according to Guillen. Even with scrubbing such necessities as air conditioning, a catwalk over the auditorium, and 24 other possibilities, all that could be saved was about $200,000 after redesign costs and rebids by the subcontractors were factored in.

“It became obvious that the building committee had really done its job well,” Guillen said.

Also supported by the city was $415,000 for construction additions — elements which would allow interior updates later when more money is available. Nancy Doolittle, chairman of “The Arts,” urged the city to “go for them now at current prices.”

A number of spectators addressed the council, stressing the cultural and economic importance of Sunset Theater both to the community and city. Doolittle said not only is Sunset home to the performing arts, its rental revenue for the city is substantial, too. She said that organizations displaced from Sunset must be “brought home” as soon as possible. Each ticket sold for Sunset Theater performances here brings $11 of income to city businesses, Doolittle said, quoting a recent study.

REQUEST FOR Historical Information

The City of Carmel-by-the-Sea is conducting a comprehensive historic resources survey of properties within the city limits and invites your participation. Previous survey data and studies are being consolidated and new fieldwork will augment past work. The final product will be an inventory of all historic resources in the City.

The time period being studied is from aboriginal times to the 1950s. Historic resources can include buildings, structures, objects, sites, and districts significant in the prehistory or development of the City. To prepare as complete an inventory as possible, the City would appreciate your suggestions and recommendations for properties to be included in the study.

If you are interested in preserving the City's cultural heritage and have historical data, or think your property, or a property you are familiar with, might qualify as a historic resource, please contact the Community Planning and Building Department by mail at P.O. Drawer G, Carmel, CA 93921, by email at cityhall@ci.carmel.ca.us or call 620-2010.

SEAVEY SAYS CITY HAS 200 HISTORIC HOMES

By TAMARA GRIPPI

AFTER SURVEYING 3,100 buildings throughout Carmel-by-the-Sea, historic preservation consultant Kent Seavey has found approximately 200 properties he believes are worthy of historic recognition.

Seavey is completing his analysis of the properties and will submit his survey of historic buildings to the Carmel City Council next month. The new survey is a crucial element to the completion of the city's local coastal program, which Carmel officials hope to submit to the California Coastal Commission by year's end.

"I think we have a pretty good cross section," said Seavey. "I walked every block and checked each property. My intention was to see what was out there."

In addition to a street-by-street examination of the city and his own independent research, Seavey also reviewed several earlier historic surveys of Carmel, including some of the work undertaken by Enid Sales and volunteers of a private preservation group — the forerunner of the Carmel Preservation Foundation.

Seavey had access to Sales' research that had been completed before 1996 and filed at Sonoma State University, the regional clearinghouse for historic archives.

After he's finished with his historic evaluations, Seavey plans to share his work with other historians, architectural historians and long-time residents, such as Glenn Leidig, who will serve as peer reviewers.

Seavey said he was enthusiastic to find some impressive examples of "Bay Area modernism," — functional homes crafted out of natural materials, free of decoration — which he believes qualify as important historic buildings.

Many of the city's homes from the 1940s had not been examined by preservations before, since earlier surveys used 1940 as the cut-off date for consideration, Seavey said.

Intriguing finds

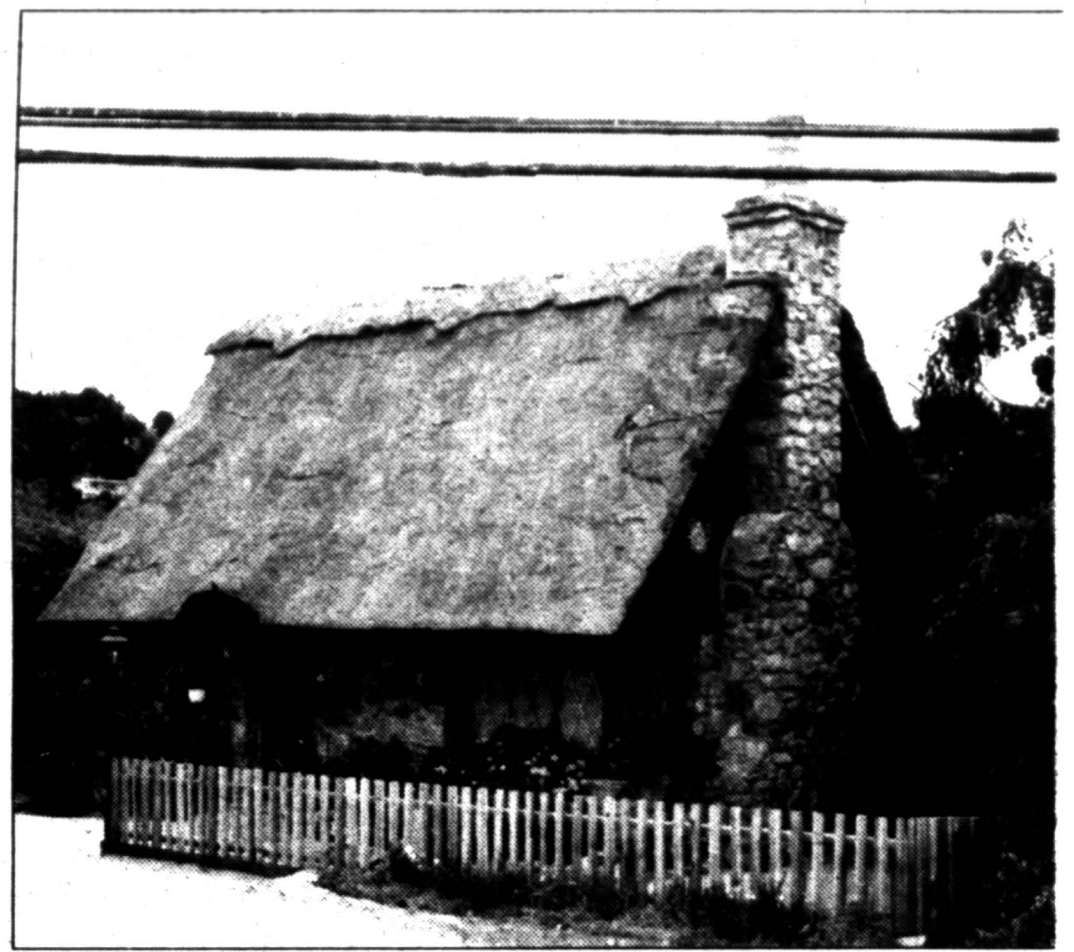

Seavey, a former U.S. Marine who did graduate work in art and architectural history at Stanford, served as the first historic coordinator for Monterey County.

The preservationist, who has surveyed the historic homes of San Juan Bautista, Belmont and San Bruno, also teaches at Monterey Peninsula College.

Cost of making water supply legal put at $131 million

By MARY BROWNFIELD
and PAUL MILLER

A PRICE TAG has finally been attached to the collection of water supply alternatives being studied by the California Public Utilities Commission to help eliminate illegal pumping from the Carmel River.

In a report made public this week, a consultant hired by the PUC said it would cost $130.8 million to legalize a 7,730 acre-foot water supply for the Monterey Peninsula by building a desalination plant on Monterey Bay, increasing use of reclaimed water and storing more water underground.

That's about the same as the predicted cost of a new dam on the Carmel River. Either project would add substantially to the cost of water for 100,000 Cal-Am customers who now pay about a half-cent for each gallon of water that runs from their taps. That figure could rise by 50 percent or more, according to an analysis of Plan B documents by The Pine Cone.

The report was greeted with cautious optimism by officials of the Cal-Am Water Company, which was ordered by the SWRCB in 1995 to reduce pumping from the Carmel River by 10,730 acre-feet per year — more than half of the Monterey Peninsula's total water supply.

Cal-Am has long sought to eliminate the illegal pumping by building a new dam and reservoir on the upper Carmel River at a cost that was estimated three years ago at $128 million.

"We're glad the PUC is moving ahead," said Cal-Am spokesman Kevin Tilden. "The report needs careful analysis for its impact on ratepayers and whether it has the ability to produce an amount of water approximately equal to the water from a new dam at about the same price."

"Our analysis showed that the Carmel River Reservoir would produce water for $1,025 per acre-foot per year, which makes Plan B seem expensive, but we're willing to support Plan B if the public will support the cost," said Terry Ryan, vice president and manager of Cal-Am's Monterey Division.

According to the report, the facilities proposed by the PUC could be completed by January 2009 and yield 7,730 acre-feet of the much-needed water at a construction cost of $130.8 million and annual operating and maintenance costs of $5.68 million. That amounts to $2,100 per acre-foot per year, the report said. An acre-foot is about 321,000 gallons.

The remaining 3,000 acre-feet of illegal pumping would be made good by simply asking the SWRCB to change its mind and declare the 3,000 acre-feet to be legal after all.

The suggestions — dubbed the Carmel River Dam Contingency Plan, or Plan B — come as a result of a September 1998 Assembly Bill authored by Fred Keeley. The total cost of the Plan B planning process will be $1.5 million when the final report is completed, along with another $250,000 to see it through the final EIR process, according to Fred Currie, chief of the PUC's water advisory branch. Most of that cost is being paid by Cal-Am customers through surcharges to their water bills.

The details

After researching the issue and holding public meetings to gather input on the water supply alternatives, the PUC's consultant has proposed that a legal water supply be

First Carmel Red Cross volunteer heads to NYC disaster site

By MARY BROWNFIELD

AMERICAN RED Cross Carmel Chapter volunteer Denise Gilliam is scheduled to be the first from the area to fly to New York City to help survivors of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. Her job, which she has done for the past six years at disaster sites all over the country, will be to try to help people who have been overlooked.

"The populations of people who might have trouble getting services — the elderly, the handicapped, people with language barriers — my job is to make sure there's no impediment to them getting our services," she said. "I'm going to have to be all over the affected area, so it's going to be a big job."

Gilliam, whose experience makes her one of a select group of Red Cross volunteers, knows this disaster will be different.

"Flooding, tornadoes, hurricanes, things like that have been my experience," said Gilliam, who returned just weeks ago from flood-damaged areas in West Virginia and helped victims of natural disasters in Texas, Oklahoma, Alabama, Mississippi and other states earlier this year. "I've never been to a terrorist situation and never an aviation disaster — which we're designated to respond to — so this is a new experience for me," she said.

Her years of Red Cross work have taught Gilliam to remain calm in even the most intense situations and to comfort people in extreme emotional states.

The Red Cross also counsels its own. "Red Cross workers can stay calm with clients, but afterwards we usually have to talk to each other," she said. "We have a pretty good system for that, and because this is already designated as an operation with exposure to severe emotional distress, I think everyone's going to be very careful with each other and very kind."

CMS principal Pallastrini takes top job at Carmel High School

KARL PALLASTRINI — the man at the helm of Carmel Middle School for the last 16 years — will become principal of Carmel High School effective Sept. 17. He will replace outgoing principal Jan Zettel, who is leaving to become executive director for the California School Leadership Academy in Redding.

Carmel Unified School District's superintendent, Marvin Biasotti, said he considers Pallastrini "the best match for the needs of Carmel High at this point in time," and is confident the new principal will be able to "maintain the positive momentum that currently exists at the high school."

CMS assistant principal Sally Salmon has been appointed interim principal for the remainder of the school year.

McCloud says time is right for quick retaliation

By TAMARA GRIPPI

CARMEL MAYOR Sue McCloud, a former top-ranking CIA official, said this week that earlier attacks in the U.S. — including a car bombing at the World Trade Center in 1993 — were a “wake-up call” to increased terrorist activity in the country. But she wouldn’t say that this week’s horrific events in Washington and New York were an intelligence failure.

Sue McCloud

“The wealth of information is what overwhelms the intelligence community,” McCloud said. Officials have to decide “how to sort through it quickly and decide how much time to spend running down every lead.”

The security clamp-down at military bases across the world — abruptly announced last month — was an indication that officials knew something serious was threatened, she said. But if the intelligence officials knew any specifics about the threat to New York and D.C., obviously they would have taken action to prevent the attacks.

McCloud said the intelligence game has changed dramatically since the days of the Cold War when the U.S. knew its enemy, which proudly displayed its arsenal in parades.

Nowadays, The United States has to fight unconventional warfare with conventional means, the mayor explained. State-sponsored terrorism is being replaced by trans-national groups with decentralized leadership.

And all the advances of technology are now being utilized by terrorists.

“Knowing who the enemy is is very difficult,” McCloud said. “Obviously these people had support in this country.”

The eye of the storm

On Nov. 22, 1963, McCloud, newly hired by the CIA, was participating in an intelligence briefing in the command center of the Pentagon when word came in that John F. Kennedy had been shot.

“At that point we had no idea whether it was [limited to] the president or an attack on the U.S. at large,” McCloud said. “I never saw so much gold braid run so fast to their stations. I can only image what was happening yesterday.”

What should the U.S. do now, after the biggest toll of civilian casualties in our history?

McCloud said the time is right for quick action. “There is a tremendous amount of support from the world community,” McCloud said. “My personal feeling is that if we’re going to do something it should be done while we have that support.”

And with the horrifying attacks in New York and Washington D.C. fresh in everyone’s consciousness, Americans should be prepared for the changes which are necessary to protect them, McCloud said.

“American citizens are going to have to give up some of their freedom to ensure safety,” she said.

A 40-pound raincoat

During her career, McCloud was targeted by a Middle Eastern terrorist group and knows firsthand what it’s like to live constantly on the alert.

“They sent me a bullet-proof London Fog coat,” she said. “It weighed 40 pounds and I was walking around in 90 degree weather. I had fun going into a very fancy restaurant. The maître d’ took the coat and just about lost his arm.”

But beneath McCloud’s joke lies a recognition of possible danger most Americans paid no attention to — until Monday.

“Americans are very naive,” McCloud said. “They have to

Farr says Congress was 'not alerted' to any danger among the dozens of government buildings evacuated.

But members of Congress were never alerted by any federal agency about possible danger to them or the Capitol building, Congressman Sam Farr said this week.

"I was on the House floor when the plane hit the Pentagon," he said. "We could see the smoke outside and when we found out it was the Pentagon that was hit, the leadership figured we might be next and decided to evacuate."

The evacuation order wasn't based on a warning that the Capitol was targeted, though a plane had been spotted by a policeman who thought it was headed for Congress.

"We were kept very uninformed. It was left up to each individual member to find out whatever they could," Farr said.

He started the day with an early morning meeting with the Democratic leadership on the House Appropriations Committee when Dick Gephardt suddenly said, "You're not going to believe this," and told his colleagues about the first attack on the New York skyscrapers. "We were all watching on television when the second plane hit," Farr said.

After the decision was made to evacuate, the Congressman, who lives in Carmel, got word to his staff to rendezvous at his Washington, D.C. apartment, which is just one block from the Capitol. Later, they moved to the home of Farr's Chief of Staff, Rachel Dornat.

After helping constituents find their relatives in New York, Farr issued a statement offering sympathy for victims of the terror attack and promising to use the resources of his office to assist people in need.

"Congress was fully unprepared to respond to this," he said. "We obviously must find better ways to ensure security."

Later, Farr said responding to the terror attack would involve three steps.

"First is recovery and treatment of injured to try to prevent more deaths. Politician can be helpful by backing up the emergency crews and making sure adequate resources are available to them," Farr said.

"The second stage is to figure out why this happened, who caused it and how we could've been better alerted. And the third stage is the retaliation or the bringing to justice of those who have committed the crime."

He said Congress and the White House would cooperate in identifying the perpetrators and acting against them, but that Congress wouldn't let the President act unilaterally.

"The legislative branch of government wants to be adequately involved. We won't tolerate the administration acting on its own," Farr said.

Comments made by Congressman Sam Farr during a debate Wednesday on a joint resolution of Congress condemning Tuesday's terrorist attacks in New York and Washington:

Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this bill which deplores yesterday's barbarous attack against our country and our people. I commend all of my colleagues for their heart-felt and inspiring words. I would like to add my voice to the resounding unanimity of this body in commending the heroic deeds of our fellow countrymen and condemning the treacherous act of terrorism which struck at the heart of our nation.

First, I would like to extend my deepest sympathies and condolences to families and friends who have lost their loved ones in this horrendous, tragic event. These innocent lives were ended without reason, without warning. They were not, however, ended without cause. We know that they died in defense of our country, of the American way of life. All of those grieving should know that these lives were not lost in vain.

In this hour of loss and need, I have been astounded by the countless acts of solidarity and self-sacrifice exhibited by Americans toward their neighbors. These are, indeed, "the times that try men's souls." America has been tried and it has been proven true. True to the ideals of courage, of honor, of love and friendship to our fellow man. We must give thanks to live in a land that inspires such loving and giving people. Sufficient praise cannot be given to the fire-fighters, relief workers, and ordinary citizens who, in the face of life-threatening adversity, turned and entered the jaws of death to save lives. Some of these brave heroes sacrificed themselves that others might live. In this day and age, when we are accused of being a selfish, self-centered and apathetic generation, we can look back to these acts and these people and they will give us strength and faith in ourselves and in our great nation.

And as we look back, we must also look forward. For our task ahead is to continue the work of "making the world safe for democracy." We are called upon now to renew and strengthen this great and noble mission. As many here have said so forcefully and eloquently, democracy itself has been threatened and we must respond. We must respond by steeling ourselves against our enemies, and fighting against the chaos that they sought to inflict upon us. We must continue to demonstrate our strength and our unity. We must continue to show the world that we are one country, with one heart and one will. We will find our enemies, we will meet them and we will defeat them. And just as the bombings of New York

PENINSULA PEOPLE HELP WITH BLOOD DONATIONS, DISASTER TRAINING

By MARY BROWNFIELD

THOUSANDS FLOCKED to hospitals and blood donation sites throughout the Peninsula this week to fight a reported national blood shortage in the wake of the terrorist attacks in New York and Washington, D.C.

A phlebotomist answered a constantly ringing phone and questions from a long line of eager donors at Community Hospital's blood center on Hartnell Street in Monterey.

Many waited more than two hours to donate blood, according to donor recruiter Cynthia Cameron. The blood center's hours were extended all week from 8:30 a.m. to 7 p.m., and the appointment books quickly filled.

Seasoned veterans, as well as many first-time or occasional blood donors, filled out the required paperwork and waited to take their turns in the reclining donation chairs.

Patti Alnas and Kim Howard received an e-mail at work calling for donors and headed down to the blood center.

"We want to be able to help and we can't be back East, so this is the next best thing," Howard said. The women's company had employees in the World Trade Center, but the staff there is reportedly OK, according to Alnas.

Carmel resident Mark Feldberg ordered pizzas for everyone after he saw how many people were waiting to give.

"Clearly the response has been incredible," he said. "I think it's terrific everyone's come out in such force."

Although CHOMP's blood center typically supplies the hospital, its affiliation with the American Red Cross means the blood it collects will be shipped wherever is needed.

Additional blood drives will be held throughout the Peninsula during the next couple of weeks, including:

■ Sunday, Sept. 16, 9 a.m. to noon at Congregation Beth Israel, 5716 Carmel Valley Road, Carmel Valley; and

■ Thursday, Sept. 20, 6:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the parking lot at Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula.

The blood center will be closed Friday, Sept. 14 for a scheduled blood drive at the Defense Language Institute.

For information, contact the Blood Center at 625-4814.

As Red Cross volunteers prepare to leave for the East Coast and for grief counseling assignments in San Francisco and Los Angeles, the Carmel Chapter is working quickly to train more volunteers in disaster preparedness and health care, coordinate blood donation and raise much-needed funds, according to spokeswoman Peggy Mauz.

Introduction to Disaster is mandatory for anyone interested in disaster relief volunteerism, and courses will be offered Sept. 15 and 16 from 9 a.m. to noon at the Carmel Youth Center. From 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. both afternoons, an overview of mass care will be held.

"Mass care is the feeding and sheltering of displaced clients during a disaster," Mauz explained. "It will be very necessary in Manhattan."

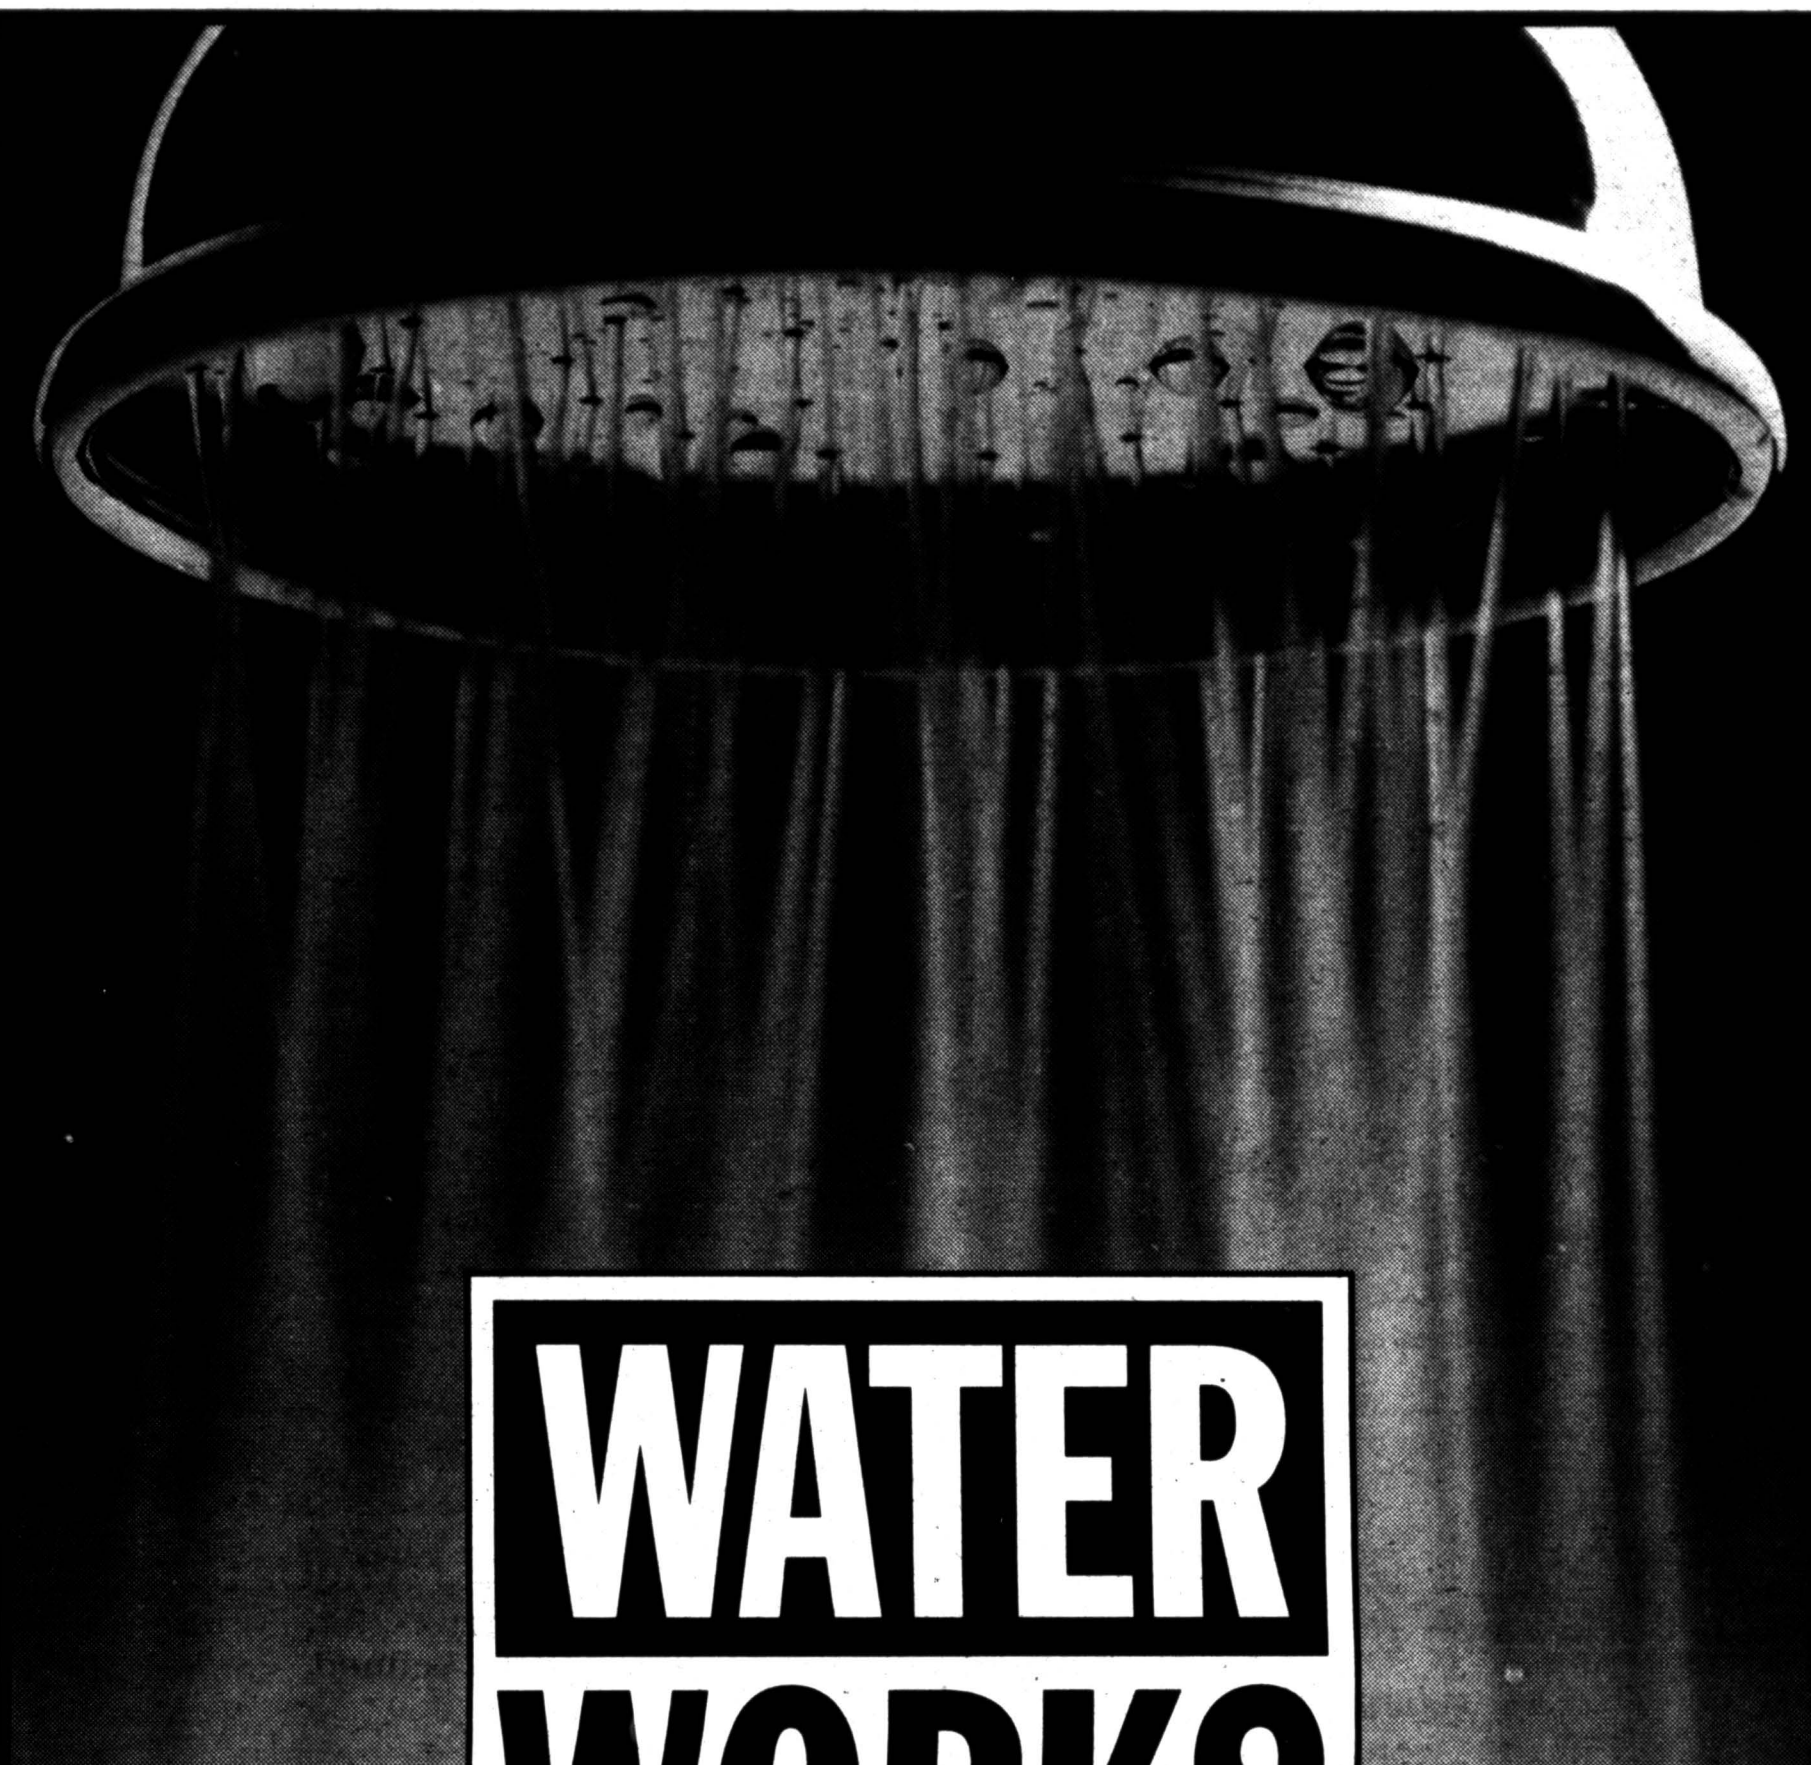

Another Introduction to Disaster course will be held at the Red Cross Carmel Chapter House at Dolores and Eighth Thursday, Sept. 20, from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. and a Health Service Overview course will take place there the following day. A Health Service Simulation course will be offered at the chapter house Saturday, Sept. 22 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Finally, she said, financial donations are extremely important. "All American Red Cross disaster assistance is free, made possible by voluntary donations of time and money from the American people," she said.

Contributions can be made to the ARC Disaster Relief Fund by calling 1 800 HELP NOW or by mailing a check to P.O. Box AR, Carmel, CA 93921.

cool shower on a hot day. Nothing could be more refreshing. And it saves water, too.

Taking a short shower instead of a bath can save twenty gallons of water. A household of two can save as much as 1,200 gallons of water per month. It brings new meaning to feeling good about saving water!

Showers are just one way you can save water and save money. Here are a few additional ways you can help preserve Monterey Peninsula's water resources:

- Pick up a free low flow shower head and hose nozzle, courtesy of Cal-Am.
- Apply for a $100 rebate from Cal-Am when you install an ultra-low flush toilet.
- Apply for a $150 rebate from Cal-Am when you buy a washing machine with an EnergyStar label (you may also be eligible for additional rebates from PG&E.)
- Call Cal-Am for a free guide to water-saving irrigation tips for your home or business.
- Run washing machines and dishwashers only when full – and only during off-peak hours to save on your electricity bill as well.

For more information on free fixtures or rebates for water-saving facilities in your home, please give us a call at (831) 642-3200 – or drop by our neighborhood office at 50 Ragsdale Drive, Monterey.

Local events remain on tap despite terrorist attacks

By MARY BROWNFIELD

AFTER DEBATING whether or not to even hold its annual Coastal Cleanup Day, California Coastal Commission staff decided the beach cleanups slated for Saturday, Sept. 15, from 9 a.m. to noon, should go forward.

"We see a lot of value in bringing the community together during the event, to have a chance to commemorate and heal," said outreach coordinator Eben Schwartz. "Even if the cleanup becomes secondary, there's a lot of value in bringing people together like this."

The cleanups will commence at more than 400 sites on beaches, bays, rivers, creeks, parks, roadsides and highways throughout the state, including Monterey Wharfs 1 and 2, San Carlos Beach, Cannery Row, Asilomar, Carmel Beach, Carmel River State Beach, Monastery State Beach, Garrapata and Andrew Molera. Dive cleanups will also be launched from Wharf 2 and San Carlos Beach in the City of Monterey.

People interested in helping are encouraged to drop in at any of those sites. For more information, call 1-800-COAST4U or visit www.coastal.ca.gov

Carmel TomatoFest

Tomato addicts and other gastronomes can still attend the TomatoFest on Sunday, Sept. 16, from 12:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. at Quail Lodge in Carmel Valley.

Scheduled to include a tasting of more than 300 varieties of tomato, an "extravagant country BBQ," dishes prepared by 50 local restaurants, tastes of more than 60 Monterey County wines, a "Best of the Fest" tomato salsa contest, a country store, olive-oil tastings and "Italian Pavilion," a garlic showcase, sales of rare tomatoes and seeds, live music and dancing, the $75-per-person event will benefit youth charities. For more information, call 625-6041.

Stevenson Run in the Forest

The Stevenson Run in the Forest takes off Saturday, Sept. 22, at 8 a.m. according to organizer Amy White. A 5K walk/run and a 10K run along beautiful stretches of road through Pebble Beach, a free T-shirt and a superb pancake breakfast will reward participants, she said.

Each walker or runner must pay a $30 entry fee ($15 for children under 12) right up to race day, which goes straight to academics, athletics, financial aid and fine arts at the school, White said. Registration and check-in open at 6:30 a.m.

For more information, contact the school at 626-5333.

Wells Fargo, realtors group donate millions, seek more for victims of tragedies

WELLS FARGO chairman Dick Kovacevich announced Wednesday that the bank is contributing $1 million to the Red Cross relief fund to help pay for rescue efforts in the wake of Tuesday's terrorist attacks. Carmel branch officer Lee Whitney said an account at the bank has also been set up to receive additional contributions from the public. She encouraged Monterey Peninsula residents to visit Wells Fargo at San Carlos and Ocean, at The Crossroads, in Pacific Grove or in Monterey to make a donation. She can be reached at 624-5303.

The National Association of Realtors has also set up a relief fund to help pay the mortgage and rental costs of families devastated by Tuesday's terror attacks. NAR is making an initial donation of $1 million and president Richard Mendenhall urged real estate professionals nationwide to donate to the fund. Call 1-800-874-6500 to make a contribution or to get more information.

Memorial at county courthouse

MONTEREY COUNTY will hold a memorial tribute at noon Friday in the courtyard of the Monterey County Courthouse in Salinas.

The service will be a "patriotic tribute" as part of the national day of mourning and will include a moment of silence for people to pause, reflect or say a prayer.

Both Monterey County employees and members of the public are invited to attend.

and Washington were moral as well as physical attacks, we must concentrate our efforts on defeating our moral as well as our physical enemies. Terrorism does not reside in one man, in one country. It is an idea which must be combated each day in the hearts and minds if it is to be defeated once and for all.

And just as we must and will find and bring to justice those who are responsible for this atrocious and unpardonable act, we must not think that one attack will be sufficient. The war on terrorism will be a war to eradicate the seeds of terrorism, a war to eliminate the environment in which terrorism takes root. To make the world safe for democracy, we must make the world impossible for terrorism.

I thank the Speaker for giving me the opportunity to express my sorrow, sympathy, admiration and indignation. As we move forward, we must move together and present a unified front to our allies and enemies — meeting the former with love, appreciation and solidarity, the latter with steadfast resolve and determination. God bless America and our righteous mission.

Pebble Beach resident interrupts burglary

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

A ROBERT Louis Stevenson staff member had a rude awakening around 1 a.m. the morning of Sept. 10, when he emerged from sleep to find a burglar in his home, according to sheriff's deputy Bill Cassara.

Deputies responded after the victim called 911 to report the break-in. The suspect had already fled, but the victim described the vehicle — a white 1988 BMW — and the items stolen from his home, Cassara said.

A Pacific Grove police officer spotted the car outside the Country Club Gate and stopped it at David and Patterson. He detained the car's occupants — 19-year-olds Andrew Caird and Andrew Jenkins, both of Pacific Grove — while waiting for sheriff's deputies to arrive.

Deputies brought the victim to the scene, where he identified a speaker, a Pebble Beach 2000 U.S. Open jacket and some CDs found in the car as the same items that had been stolen from his house moments earlier, according to Cassara.

The two men were booked into Monterey County Jail.

Correction

LAST WEEK'S story on Randall Reinstedt's 1976 book signing of "Tales, Treasures and Pirates of Old Monterey" there were two errors: The copy should have read, "Back then the Corner wasn't just a restaurant, but a sort of village hangout," and the post office was not next door to The Village Corner in 1976, it was in its present location. The photo of The Corner and the post office shown almost side by side in the previous Pine Cone, was taken in the late '40s or early '50s. The post office didn't move from Dolores Street to Fifth Avenue until October 1951.

tend to tell children what they should feel rather than listening to them."

CMS principal Karl Pallastrini requested all media be turned off at the school the day of the attacks.

"We just didn't want to watch live carnage unfold," he said. "They are too young."

School staff encouraged students who chose to watch the news at home to do so with an adult, according to Anderson.

"My sense is our parents have done a good job, because it's a good atmosphere here," she said from middle school Wednesday. "It's not a hysterical atmosphere here at school, but this is going to take a long time because of the ongoing news coverage. Now we're just dealing with tragic loss of life and the destruction."

At Carmel High, principal Jan Zettel spoke to the entire student body over the public address system the morning of the attacks, asking them to keep the victims and survivors in their thoughts and prayers while also focusing on their work.

"We are not ignoring it, but we are not spending all day talking about it," he said.

Teachers fielded questions throughout the day, some watching the news and discussing the events with their students, according to Zettel.

"We just let the kids talk about it," he said.

The school's three counselors also met with those who needed them, and like other school principals, Zettel spent much of Tuesday walking through the hallways and checking in on classrooms.

"The day was pretty upsetting," he said. "I had a lot of kids stop me in the hall and talk to me about it. They were upset, and they were worried. I just tried to be very reassuring."

The following day, the school's chamber group asked permission to sing the Star-Spangled Banner over the P.A. system, a wish Zettel gladly granted.

"It was beautifully done," he said. "There were tears. They were wonderful and very sincere."

Younger students at Tularcitos and River School also had access to counselors and were encouraged to ask questions, but teachers at those schools opted to maintain a sense of business as usual.

"For children normalcy is important," said Carmel River School principal Sharron Douglas. "Children live in the moment, and as long as we're OK, they're OK. It was a challenge for the staff, but they handled it beautifully."

Parents with training in counseling also volunteered their services at River School, Douglas said, adding that attendance levels were no different than usual.

"That was a real affirmation of how safe parents felt sending their children to us," she said.

Kim Williams, principal at Tularcitos Elementary School, directed teachers "to discuss it, but without too much gory detail, and to comfort them, to calm the children and get back to as much of a normal routine as possible because that's what kids need and want."

In addition to having counselors available and visiting each classroom on his own to give out hugs wherever needed, Williams had the entire school gather around the flag at the end of the school day.

"We recognized it was important to gather as a family, and we talked a little bit about what had happened, just briefly," he said. "We recognized the fact that we may be saddened, frightened, even angry, but went on to say our country's still strong."

Williams asked the school's drama coach to sing the national anthem, especially because it was composed during a time of strife.

"It was very stirring," he said. "I've never had the words be so meaningful as then."

Trudy Dowd, a Tularcitos counselor, said she and others have spent time reassuring their students of their safety and helping them cope with events they cannot understand.

"What I noticed was that in general, they were more emotionally fragile than normal and probably will be for a number of weeks, as will all of us," she said.

Tularcitos first grade teacher Lynn Handshay said she has addressed the catastrophe with her students on a more general level, using it as a lesson on caring for others.

"We were talking about being empathetic towards other people's tragedies, and talking about that generically rather than anything that would foment any specific fear," she said.

Many children arriving at school the following day had repeatedly seen images of the disasters in New York and Washington, D.C., according to Handshay, and they continue to turn to teachers and counselors for help.

"We are providing them with some strategies for identifying their feelings and giving them a venue to express those feelings because all of the psychological consultants urge us to provide a safe place to talk," she said. "And that's part of their feeling of safety — that they can trust the school environment and the school community."

"We had the church opened all day, of course, and were ringing the bell every half hour, hopefully calling people to prayer," said the Reverend Holly Hudson-Louis, associate rector for All Saints Episcopal Church.

As a symbol of hope, All Saints placed a lit Paschal candle — typically associated with Good Friday and Easter — at the center of the church.

"Amidst the horror, there is a sign of hope in God's presence among us," she said.

In addition to keeping its doors open into the evening hours, All Saints invited local clergy from various denominations to attend a special service the evening of Sept. 11.

"We just needed to gather and be together. There was a time for people to talk and express their feelings," Hudson-Louis said. "There were mostly expressions of horror, but in the midst of that, hope. That's what our faith calls us to do. Nothing separates us from the love of Christ, not even hardship and tribulation."

Carmel Mission opened its front gates and placed the Blessed Sacrament in the Basilica so individuals can pray whenever they need to, according to a spokeswoman there. The Mission also held a special mass the evening of Sept. 12 to pray for the repose of the souls, the deceased victims and their living families. About 350 people attended.

"You can just feel the love when something like this happens," she said. "They always say, 'separation of church and state,' and then something like this happens and where do you go? Right back to God."

Church of the Wayfarer, which held a special afternoon service the day of the attacks, will keep its sanctuary doors open until 8 p.m. through the end of the week, according to Elsea. And a 10 a.m. service on Sunday will focus on remembrance and prayer.

"Community, church members and tourists very much appreciate having a place to come for fellowship, comfort and words of hope," she said.

Elsea said she hopes the church will remind people to be compassionate towards each other and not focus on retaliation, and that everyone should be "living lives that model justice, reconciliation and peace."

"God wins the victory eventually, and when we give in to evil, evil wins," she said.

TOT STEALS LIMELIGHT AT HOSPICE AWARDS DINNER

TICKETS SOLD out yet again for the annual Hospice Golf Scramble & Awards Dinner held Sept. 4th at Quail Lodge by the Hospice Foundation for the Central Coast.

Pine Needles
By Sissi Maleki

In its 19th year, the event traditionally honors significant contributors. Honoree for 2001, Clint Eastwood, had the organizers sweating bullets on this day, showing up at the 11th hour. The fun surprise was Morgan, the Eastwoods' 4-year-old daughter. She was quite a bundle of energy, keeping mom Dina constantly on her toes. Maybe Morgan already knew her parents were to go to the White House for dinner the next evening.

Helen Westland, last year's honoree, said she had invited Bill Murray to join them last year, but he had not been able to make it.

"He said 'They're not honoring you!' and explained his kids were starting school," she recounted. Given the obvious affection Bill exhibited last year with Helen, that's not boasting.

Susan Ferriman Jenkins decided, based on her swings that day, "I'm only 'on the path' to becoming a good player."

Susan, Ben & Carol Heinrich and Bob & Gini Auger all agreed Ed Haber, Quail's godfather, deserved a special thank you for his continuing support.

Ed, for his part, was taking around Quail Lodge's new general manager, Felix Bieger, and introducing him to several members of Carmel's golfing community.

Retired football referee Jim Tunney, whose group was just one stroke out of the championship, was still feeling pretty good about it.

"It's a great cause and a fun group of people!" Dan Tibbits, chatting with Ollie Nutt, said he was pleased with his game, too.

Bart Bruno, who played with CHOMP's CEO, Steve Packer, admitted the experience had been unique.

ted the experience had been unique.

"I saw some shots I've never seen before!" he said with a straight face, while Steve turned redder by the second. But from the sound of general laughter, a perfect game wouldn't have been half as much fun.

John Houghton, Jill & David Fanucchi and Peggy Kelley also laughed up a storm reminiscing over the game.

Volunteers Sue Dollemore and Paula Lotz greeted both friends and players returning from the links.

Longtime supporters Denise & Ducky O'Toole were among the crowd. The local Duffy clan (Denise's side) had just returned from Ireland, where one of their cousins held a big wedding. A dozen of them gathered in the town of Limerick and between the singing and merrymaking, it's a good thing they remembered where home was.

Patricia & Morris Porter chatted with Mary Butler and Barbara Lee about their recent travels.

Others present included Rick & Martha Kennifer, Sylvia Medina, Lynn Booth Scanlon and Sherry Shollenbarger.

Four-year-old Morgan Eastwood was quite the mischievous imp for her parents, Clint and Dina, at the Hospice Foundation awards dinner.

MPC Players at Cherry Hall earn an 'A+' for effort

By BEVERLY HILL VAN JOOLEN

GOOD WRITING, music, dance and art stimulate discussion, emotion and controversy. At the very least, they trigger curiosity. This bodes ill for Keith Reddin's "Brutality of Fact" because the fact is, the play is an unsophisticated, agenda driven collection of a few good laughs. Still, the show must go on and the MPC Players, directed by Conrad Selvig, give their all to this boorish script.

Extremism is the theme of the play, and in particular, the illogical nature of fundamentalism. Inspired by the religious zealotry at the heart of the Waco debacle, "Brutality of Fact" focuses on one family's efforts to cope with alcoholism, aging, loneliness and the control imposed on them when one daughter joins the Jehovah's Witnesses.

If the author's intent was to satirize the insanity that is fanaticism, he failed. What he does accomplish is to insult the intelligence of women, the sanctity of religious freedom, the morals of lesbians, and the decency of African-American men.

Commendable cast

The players, however, are commendable. Neva Hahns is Val, a 70-something widow forced to live with her zealot daughter, Jackie (Virginia August). Hahns is brash, funny and carries the show with her one-liners and expressive mannerisms. August is convincingly pathetic and gullible as a woman who gets so caught up in being "saved," that she loses both her own daughter, Marlene (Caitlin Elise Smith), and her husband, Harold (Conrad Selvig). Selvig gives a clean, understated performance as the well-intentioned but loutish husband and Smith is adorable.

As Chris, a fellow church member, Chris Heimer creates an amazing slight of mind as he exposes his character's true colors, layer by smarmy layer. Deirdre McCauley plays Maggie, the alcoholic daughter Val leans on to escape Jackie's proselytizing. McCauley is astute as an unreliable, arrogant and foul-mouthed drunk.

The women in this dysfunctional family are haunted by dreams and look for help in all the wrong places. Supporting roles are played by Lynette Graves and Susan Keenan. Keenan, a consummate actress, is a commanding force when she is on the stage.

To implement the numerous scene changes on the small Cherry Hall stage, Selvig designed minimalist mini sets against a black backdrop. In addition, hip "Frasier-like" title boards and suggestive musical interludes, by sound designer Kent Carlson and Selvig, are used. Lighting is by Steve Retsky.

Selvig mounted this play five years ago and for some shows, a repeat run is a good thing. Not so in this case. "Brutality of Fact" is a brutal use of the stage as a bully pulpit. For those with strong religious or language sensitivities, it pushes the envelope and will offend. For others, it's just an unfortunate misuse of ideology, prose and talent. Quills split!

IF YOU were so unfortunate as to miss the beautifully mounted historic exhibit of E. Charlton Fortune at the Carmel Art Association — it came down on Sept. 5 — all is not lost: You can read all about this remarkable woman in the CAA's commemorative book exquisitely designed by Takigawa Design of Monterey.

Janet A. Howell, the CAA's director, and her publication committee are to be congratulated on this book, entitled simply "E. Charlton Fortune, 1885-1969." A great deal of research went into its compilation of 51 paintings and photographs of Fortune's very excellent impressionistic paintings, liturgical art work and text.

Following the 1906 San Francisco earthquake, Bay Area artists flocked to Carmel to work amid the beauty of the Monterey Peninsula, and Fortune found women artists welcome and accepted.

Her artistic journey is examined in excellent essays and text by Howell, William Gerdts, Penny Perlmutter, Tina Santi Flaherty and Steve Hauk. Reproductions of her work are faithfully captured on high quality velum by Hemlock Printers, Burnaby, British Columbia.

The book, in soft cover and linen hard cover with slip case, is available at the CAA for $40 and $85, respectively. Either will be a real addition to your library — a book to keep, peruse and cherish over the years.

For information, call the CAA at 624-6176.

LOCAL AUTHOR J. McCaffery tells the story of Emily Fish, principal lighthouse keeper for 21 years at Point Pinos, Pacific Grove, using quotations from her log and those of numerous other keepers. His book, "Lighthouse—Point Pinos, Pacific Grove, California," is newly released and is a must-read for all locals and all lighthouse aficionados.

The cover photograph by McCaffery — who is a professor of government budgeting at the Naval Postgraduate School in Monterey — is a stunning shot of the lighthouse silhouetted against a setting sun, with the little lighthouse's beacon bravely guiding those at sea. More than 120 black and white photos — half of them archival — record the history of the lighthouse and its keepers with the intimacy and affection of a dedicated docent. McCaffery records how the keepers were threatened with eviction, prohibited from cutting the surrounding trees and suffered all manner of indignities.

This story of a "quiet little lighthouse" where "nothing

IF YOU were around San Francisco in the mid '50s, you probably were aware of the Beat scene in North Beach. It will be 46 years ago next month at the long-defunct Six Gallery that Allen Ginsberg read his poem "Howl" in its first public debut. It was two years later that the poem stirred a landmark obscenity trial under Judge Clayton Horn's gavel. Publisher and North Beach bookseller Lawrence Ferlinghetti, friend to the Beats, helped kick-start the whole thing and turned City Lights Books on Columbus at Broadway into the center of the San Francisco 1950s poetry renaissance. To commemorate that historic poem and its consequences to the American literary scene, there will be a reading of the 3,000-word poem at The Carl Cherry Center for the Arts at 7:30 p.m., Thursday, Sept. 20. Michael Stamp, Bill Monning and Ed Leeper are the readers. An $8 donation is requested. The Carl Cherry Center is located at Guadalupe at Fourth, Carmel-by-the-Sea. For information, call 624-7491.

In the summer of 1961, a small bookshop opened its doors in Carmel Valley Village. The owners, Jim & Corene Smith, had conceived the novel idea of combining books and food... thus giving birth to what is now the oldest bookstore/café in America. Nine successful years and two locations later, the Smiths sold their Thunderbird Bookshop to John & May Waldroup. Venerable Mission Ranch brings back the best of the '50s

IT'S PACKED. It's noisy. It's full of good cheer: It's like walking into the '50s, but without the cigarette smoke.

The Restaurant at Mission Ranch is a perennial favorite of locals and visitors alike — many waiting hopefully for Clint to drop by — which he frequently does.

And the food is good — decidedly retro in presentation — from the relish tray of big, black olives, carrot sticks and scallions, to the basket of crusty garlic bread that accompanies dinner.

You can't get San Pellegrino bottled water here, but Crystal Geyser is in abundance; there's a good wine list, and of course there's a bar and a piano bar that draw lots of aficionados.

When we made reservations for an early Sunday dinner, we were asked to come in at 5:45. We were seated promptly in the main dining room window table we had requested, and Lisa, our attentive server, provided us with menus and wine list. Water, bread and the relish tray made us welcome as we studied the well-rounded menu, which provides something for everyone.

From the five apps ($6.75 - $10.95) and eight soups, salads and pastas ($5.25 - $14.95), we couldn't resist the Dungeness crab soup with local artichokes, tarragon and cream ($7.95). Our dinner companion opted for almond-coated baked goat cheese served with watercress and crackers ($6.75).

The crab soup, although somewhat grayish in color, was tasty with a hint of sherry adding a richness to the slightly thin consistency.

We ordered a meat and a fish entrée from the 10 offered ($16.95 - $29.65). The Pacific king salmon ($17.65), fresh and charbroiled with lemon herb broth, was served atop fresh julienne of vegetables with a side square of polenta that had been grilled. The flavors were excellent and both the salmon and polenta were perfectly prepared.

The roast prime rib of beef, $26.95 for a 1.5-inch, 18-oz. slice, was prepared exactly as we had requested, and came with a twice baked potato and fresh horseradish. In need of something green, we ordered a side of fresh spinach for $2.50. The beef was fork-tender, and the spinach succulent, dark green and flavorful. Not accustomed to eating 18-oz. of any meat, poultry or fish at one sitting, we were able to take home the sizable remainder for a home meal the next day.

Dinner was finished off with excellent espressos and a sharing of orange angel food cake ($6.50) with macerated strawberries. We could detect only the faintest suggestion of orange in the tender cake and the fresh strawberries came sliced, but not flavored.

We should mention that there are two sandwiches on the dining menu: a prime rib sandwich ($18.95) served open face, with homemade onion rings, sliced tomatoes and steak fries; and a char-broiled hamburger ($10.65) with French fries or a mini-salad. If you want Sonoma Jack, Cheddar, Swiss or blue cheese, add $1.

Chef Enrique Javier, whose training comes from the much celebrated Creme Carmel restaurant in Carmel-by-the-Sea, aided by sous chef Aquino Hernandez, turns out beautifully prepared, honest dinners, without the esoteric sauces and presentations we seem to encounter at fine dining establishments all over the peninsula. But this restaurant is busy — one of the busiest, and while preparation is never compromised, the kitchen is not geared to finicky food arrangements or unnecessary accompaniments. This makes Mission Ranch diners authentically 1950s cuisine, prepared knowledgeably and with the finest ingredients.

There were children in the dining room, all of whom were perfectly behaved, who seemed to be enjoying themselves. Adults — many in groups of four or more, were having a grand time. Laughter more or less ricocheted off the hard-surfaced, low ceiling. The piano bar was surrounded triple-deep with admirers of pianist Patti Leidecher and her repertoire of — you guessed it — hits of the '50s; we may be off a decade or two, but there was no rock 'n' roll or jazz played that night. The jazz is saved for sumptuous Sunday brunch ($21.95 adults, $10.95 for children) when Gennody Loktionov's Jazz Trio takes over. Other nights, pianists Sonny G! and David Conley are at the keyboard.

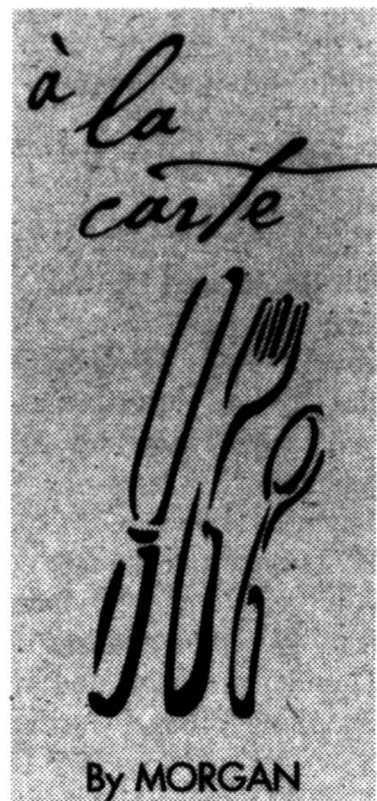

Our companion pointed out that The Mission, while not a spot for romantic dining, is perfect for a first date or to share a meal with old friends.

Personable Craig and Cynthia Ling, who have been managing The Restaurant at Mission Ranch for a decade, do a superb job of keeping the bustling dining room running smoothly, and they should be proud of their well-trained and courteous staff.

One of the real pleasures of the restaurant is its expansive deck that overlooks a sheep meadow, and in the distance, there is a glimpse of beach and a great view of Point Lobos. The deck has truly efficient heat lamps for sea breezes, but on Sunday, the very late afternoon sun was so intense almost everyone on the deck wore sun glasses.

Anticipating readers' curiosity, let me tell you that it was in 1986 that Clint Eastwood bought the 22-acre ranch (which in the 1850s comprised 160 acres and was one of the first early California dairies), thankfully rescuing it from an impending condominium development. The creamery of the old dairy is now The Restaurant at Mission Ranch.

If you haven't lunched, brunch or dined at the Mission Ranch, you must. If you have, then you've been back already.

Peninsula and its denizens played key roles in 'Play Misty for Me'

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

OF THE 180 feature movies photographed partly on the Monterey Peninsula, the 1971 thriller "Play Misty for Me" holds the distinction of being the only work filmed in its entirety right here.

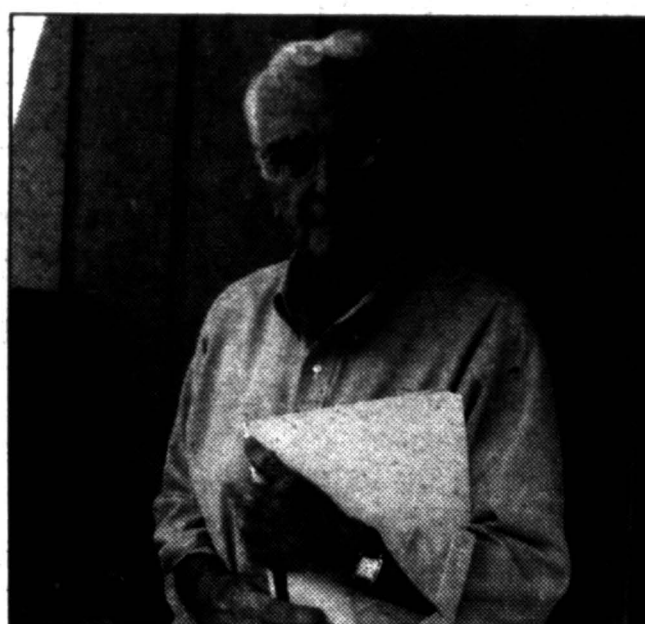

From the bar at the Sardine Factory on Cannery Row to sculpture Malcolm Moran's distinctive house on Carmel Point, the peninsula and its people play a leading part in the success of this production that was directed by and stars Clint Eastwood.

In honor of its 30th anniversary, Universal Pictures is releasing "Misty" in DVD format. The Monterey County Film Commission has organized a "release party" in Carmel as well as a "Magical Misty Tour" to sites used in the film.

The two-hour bus tour begins at 1 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 15 on a Monterey Bay Scenic Tours luxury coach. It includes live narration along with some film clips matching locations along the route. Cost is $25 per person.

That evening, starting at 5 p.m., there will be a reception set in the community room of The Crossroads, Rio Road off Highway 1, Carmel, the reception will include a red carpet welcome and party food provided by leading peninsula restaurants.

A silent auction to benefit the film commission will have items ranging from luxury hotel stays to a movie poster for "American Beauty" signed by Academy Award winner Carmelite Merv Frates had a key role in the 1971 suspense thriller, "Play Misty for Me." He played a locksmith at Brinton's who makes a key for Jessica Walters.

Kevin Spacey.

Attendees will also have a chance to pre-purchase the "Play Misty for Me Collector's Edition" DVD. Brian Congleton will add to the evening's atmosphere by displaying his Jaguar roadster convertible, similar to that driven by Clint Eastwood in the film, outside the Crossroads Cinema where the screening of "Play Misty for Me" will take place at 7:30 p.m. Tickets to the gala are $75 in advance, $85 at the door and $65 for film commission members. For reservations, call 646-0910.

PLAN B

acquired in phases.

Step one involves pouring $14.9 million into the Seaside Basin aquifer storage and recovery system, which takes surplus flow from the Carmel River during wet months and injects it into the Seaside aquifer for use during dry months. The MPWMD has already successfully tested this technology, and the PUC report said the system could initially yield 1,300 acre-feet a year by the time it comes online in 2004.

The first phase would also include pursuit of legal rights by Cal-Am and the water district for the additional 3,000 acre-feet of Carmel River water. A separate petition to the SWRCB for rights to the surplus flow for use in aquifer injection would also be required.

A subsequent phase would include boosting the Seaside recovery system from one site to three, which would involve six injection wells and accompanying pipelines, pumps, treatment and storage facilities for a total output of 3,760 acre-feet per year.

The plan also calls for support of the expansion of wastewater reclamation projects in Pebble Beach, Carmel and Marina. The water management district would back the $22 million Carmel Area Wastewater District/Pebble Beach Community Services District expansion by purchasing 175 acre-feet a year of water entitlements from the P.B. Co. That work would ultimately yield another 388 acre-feet a year of recycled water to be used by existing Cal-Am irrigation customers in Pebble Beach and Pacific Grove and private well operators in Carmel Valley, according to the report. The Marina Coast Water District expansion would eventually yield 570 acre-feet a year, for a combined 958 acre-feet per year from both operations.

If MPWMD decided not to support the Pebble Beach reclamation project, the other projects would be expanded to make up the difference.

In mid-2003, the second phase of the aquifer injection component would get under way, as well as the first part of a desalination plant in Sand City that would provide 3,020 acre-feet of water per year.

Challenges exist for each element, the report admitted, including garnering public support for the use of reclaimed water, overcoming the environmental challenges and energy costs of desalination, and finding adequate property and locations for the aquifer injection system.

Despite the fact that water-rights issues are often long-running and controversial, the PUC consultant advised they "be pursued until all avenues have been exhausted" since the cost of such work is relatively low compared with that of building additional facilities.

The report made no mention of what is now being called Plan C — construction of an off-stream reservoir at Fort Ord. That idea is being pushed by Monterey County Supervisor Dave Potter, who has criticized a desal plant as too costly — especially with its large consumption electricity.

The PUC will solicit public comments on the report at two identical meetings to be held Tuesday, Oct. 2, at 2 p.m. and 7 p.m. at the Hyatt Regency in Monterey. Comments can also be submitted in writing before Oct. 16 to Richard Tom, project manager, CPUC

Water Division, 505 Van Ness Ave., San Francisco, CA 94102 or by e-mail to rut@cpuc.ca.gov. Once written, a final Plan B recommendation will be provided to the water-management district and will be evaluated as an alternative in the EIR for the Carmel River Dam project.

PLANNING COMMISSION: CARMEL PROPERTY OWNER CAN'T HAVE WATER

By MARY BROWNFIELD

A 76-YEAR-OLD Crespi resident who has been paying property taxes on a nearby vacant parcel for more than 35 years cannot have the water she needs to build a home there, the Carmel Planning Commission unanimously decided Sept. 12. The city has no water to give, commissioners said.

Mary Boland, who lives in a large home which she wishes to sell in order to build a smaller house on her Mt. View property, had asked the city to grant some of the water from its unallocated supply to her.

"This will be the last glimmer of hope to build in my lifetime," she wrote in a July 12, 2000, letter to the planning department.

Boland argued in letters sent during the past year that the city should provide her with water because it chose to allocate water to a vacant Casanova property a year ago. But associate planner Jaci Abadilla said that application was different because it involved a property that had once been developed and had a history of water use.

Citing a Carmel City Council decision to deny a similar request in 1997 because the unallocated reserve should be saved for projects that "serve the broader community rather than private interests" and that approval might "open the door to a flood of similar requests," Abadilla recommended denial of Boland's application.

"The unallocated reserve should be retained by the city until sufficient water becomes available to provide at least minimal development for all vacant, independent lots similar to the applicant's lot," she told the commission.

Acting planning director Chip Rerig said the council's logic was reflected in the city's laws.

"We believe that was because they, too, see the potential need for a municipal project sometime in the future — a new fire station, or restrooms at the south end of the beach," he said. "So that is the policy, our procedure, our law."

Although Boland had corresponded with the planning department in writing, neither she nor anyone representing her appeared at the planning commission's hearing. Staff verified she received notice of the meeting.

"I am sympathetic to this lady, but it was just put out to us that the law of the city is the law of the city," commissioner Pope Coleman said, calling Abadilla's report persuasive. "So I think we will have to follow the recommendations of the staff."

Other commissioners agreed, voting unanimously to deny Boland's request. The denial will not be final until the planning commission approves its findings at its next meeting.

ALTERNATIVE TO TREE
SPRAYING

Soon the adult stage of the California Oak moth will be seen flying around oak trees. This is a strong indication of future consumption of foliage. A natural alternative to tree spraying is the strategic release of predatory insects. Insectaries have reported moth pest reduction of 80% or greater, worthy of consideration. For tree inspection, strategic release of predatory insects and tree health care call Peninsula Pest Management.

killing thousands, Carmel residents have wondered what they could do to help.

In a statement of hope and patriotism, the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea raised American flags all along Ocean Avenue. McCloud said she's received numerous calls, including one from someone in tears, moved by sight of the familiar red, white and blue.

'I woke up a few times during the night, thinking it didn't happen, thinking I dreamt it.'

— Paula Hazdovac

U.S. Secretary of Defense at the Pentagon.

Pages of the books are available at the Carmel Red Cross, city hall, the Carmel Business Association, Carmel Valley Market, Carmel Valley Business Service and Carmel Valley Chamber of Commerce.

Carmel High School students are organizing a candlelight vigil for the victims at 8 p.m. Sunday on Carmel Beach.

Council keeps at it

Some council members said it was important to go ahead with the Sept. 11 council meeting.

"It's so important for people of this community that we as the city demonstrate everything is OK, that we are going to go forward and we're not going to allow this to disrupt our lives" said councilman Dick Ely.

"I was pleased that Mayor McCloud wanted to go ahead with the meeting," said councilman Gerard Rose. "No one was in the mood for it, but what I told my kids is what terrorists want is for us to close down shop. No matter how small or insignificant the role, we have to go ahead."

Council members acknowledged that discussing the minutiae of Carmel politics seemed strange at a time when the United States was reeling from the worst terrorist attack in its history.

"It makes all our city business look so insignificant," said city councilwoman Barbara Livingston, "when we get together at council meetings and struggle over issues that are very important to us. But this puts everything in a different perspective."

"It didn't seem right to be discussing trivial things here, such as whether or not someone could cut down a tree," said city councilwoman Paula Hazdovac.

Not just a nightmare

Carmel's leaders echoed the shock and disbelief felt by many of their constituents.

"The horror and the inhumanity is something I cannot get over," Livingston said.

"I woke up a few times during the night, thinking it didn't happen, thinking I dreamt it," said Hazdovac.

Ely, who had a 26-year career with the Army Corps of Engineers, serving at West Point, was intimately familiar with both the Pentagon and the twin towers of the World Trade Center.

"I immediately understood the magnitude of what was going on there," Ely said. "I knew how difficult it was to evacuate people from the World Trade Center."

Council members also pointed to the inspiring acts stemming from the tragedy.

"It's interesting to see the patriotism of the younger people that I've never seen before," Hazdovac said. "People my age and younger were so jaded by Vietnam, but this is very different. You want to do something. It's giving me an understanding of what World War II must have been like."

The immediate reaction in Carmel ranged from expressions of grief to grim resolve to move forward. Carmel Plaza and several Carmel stores closed on Tuesday.

Ely, who owns Carmel Valley Roasting Company on Ocean Avenue, said he felt compelled to keep the coffee shop open as a gathering place.

"What happened in New York seemed like it occurred a long way away, but they are literally and figuratively much closer than a lot of us realize," Rose said. "The streets of Carmel were almost deserted Tuesday."

Rose said he's been buoyed by the act of flying an American flag at his house and encouraged his fellow Carmelites to do the same.

Livingston said her thoughts keep turning to the victims of the disaster and their families. "It's going to plunge people into enormous despair, not only to lose members of their family, but members of family who provide financial support. I'm hoping the American people will respond in a positive way with financial support and whatever else we can do."

EditorialTerrorists overplay their hand

THE FANATICS who attacked the United States this week have made a mistake that will be fatal to their movement if the world's peace-loving countries strike at them without hesitation or remorse.

America is horrified and angry now, but our attitude was different when the terrorists weren't so grandiose in their selection of targets or successful in killing innocent people.

Last spring, for example, more than a dozen Israeli teenagers were struck down by a suicide bomber as they innocently waited to enter a Tel Aviv discotheque. With the hawkish Ariel Sharon newly elected as the nation's prime minister, the world waited for a swift and overwhelming Israeli response — perhaps an invasion of the West Bank. But the massive retaliation never came.

When a bomb-laden boat blew a hole in the side of U.S.S. Cole in Yemen last year, 17 American sailors lost their lives. Outrage and disgust were on the lips of our nation's leaders, but we barely responded.

The 1988 destruction of a Pan Am 747 over Lockerbie, Scotland, was tied directly to Libya and its lunatic dictator, Muammar Khadafi. One of his henchmen was finally convicted this spring for planting a bomb on the plane. But Khadafi has never paid the price for killing 270 innocent people.

After years of investigation, a 1993 attempt to bring down one of the World Trade Center towers by detonating a car bomb in its parking garage finally brought long prison terms for its operatives. But for the masterminds of that attack, which killed six, the punishment was: nothing.

Even the brutal Iraqi invasion of Kuwait in 1990 drew what was actually a limited response. Allied forces evicted Hussein's army from the land it had seized, but nothing was done to him. He still sits on his throne, taunting the United States and mocking our way of life.

Why have we turned the other cheek to the killers for so long?

Because their acts have never been dastardly enough to cause the American public to demand their extinction. After all, we naturally sympathize with the plight of frustrated and oppressed peoples around the world. Terrorists use terror because they are too weak to achieve their goals by diplomatic or military means and their very weakness elicits sympathy from the soft-hearted American public.

Some terrorist leaders have shown they are keenly aware of the importance of not arousing too much wrath against themselves. The most outrageous attacks on innocent people have inevitably been followed by expressions of regret from terrorist sympathizers and their political allies. Even in Israel — where suicide bombers are a daily fear — terror attacks are almost always interspersed with periods of quiet to permit a sense of normalcy to return. The terrorists want their enemies to be afraid, but not angry enough to unleash their military might.

That's where they went wrong this week. The unspeakable effectiveness of their assault on the World Trade Center and Pentagon — far more dastardly than the attack 50 years ago on Pearl Harbor — has irretrievably altered the American view of the terrorists' movement. The American people won't be satisfied until the threat from terrorists has been extinguished — a goal which can only be achieved through the elimination of the terrorist masterminds and their support structure. Henceforth, as more terrorist cells are created, we must also keep them constantly on the run so they don't have time to plan or carry out significant attacks.

Achieving this will be a blessing not only for the West but for the Middle East, where legitimate governments also live in fear of terrorism. Just as the destruction of the Nazis and the Japanese fascists led to a great era of peace and prosperity for those two nations, elimination of terrorists from the world, and especially from the Middle East, can in fact yield great benefits for the nations that foolishly support them now.

As President Bush said Thursday, eliminating terror from the world will be a great service to future generations. This week's events have been horrible enough to give us the resolve to do so. We must not let that resolve fade.

Light candles Friday at 7 p.m.

Dear Editor:

Everyone in the whole country is being asked to step out their doors and stop their cars this Friday at 7 p.m. and light a candle. By doing this we will show the world that Americans are strong and united against terrorism. Please pass the word to everyone — by telephone or email. We need to reach everyone in the United States quickly.

Brenda Roncarati, Carmel

21st Century appeasers

Dear Editor:

As I watched with unbelieving eyes the horrible events that struck our country this week, I couldn't help thinking back to the 1930s when Hitler was marching across Europe unchallenged and Japan was arming to the teeth. Cowardly political leaders — principally Neville Chamberlain, the British Prime Minister, but also many Americans — loudly proclaimed that Germany was no threat to world peace. If the United States and England would just mind their own business and not go around trying to impose their will on other countries, everything would be fine, we were told. This appalling doctrine, called "appeasement," just encouraged the dictators, gave them time to arm and led directly to the death of hundreds of millions around the world in WWII.

Now, some voices are being raised that blame the United States for bringing this week's tragedy on itself. If we would just pursue peace instead of bullying our way around the world, we are being told, terrorists wouldn't have to resort to their bloody deeds.

Of course, history has already proved these 21st Century appeasers wrong. I pray that our government doesn't listen to them.

SECURITY

"Lindsay got out and saw the plane hit the second tower and she started running uptown," her mother said. The young woman had a cell phone but couldn't get a signal. It was an hour and a half before she could get to a pay phone and call her parents in Carmel.

The Hattons were praying their daughter wasn't in the middle of the inferno they were watching on television. "We had seen the second tower hit and the collapse of the buildings before we knew she was safe," Carol Hatton said. During that anxious 90 minutes, the Hattons called Shary Farr, who agreed to contact her husband, Congressman Sam Farr in Washington, D.C. to learn the fate of their daughter.

When Lindsay finally called home, her parents thanked God that for once, their diligent daughter had been late for work. And they were proud of the years of emergency training she received in both her local schools, which resulted in her having a surprisingly cool head amid the chaos.

"These kids have been in schools where there has been a great deal of attention paid to preparing them for an emergency in their lives, without scaring them," Carol Hatton said. "The Santa Catalina emergency response is particularly thorough. The goal is to have young people know what to do, as automatically as possible."

learn to keep their eyes and ears open and stay tuned to what's going on. I never stand where there's a group of people in an airport. I never stand near collected luggage."

McCloud has also been disturbed in recent days that some media organizations are irresponsibly releasing information that could compromise the investigations.

"I was appalled to see on television that searches would begin in two specific counties in Florida," she said. "The media have to get with it, too."

While some have criticized U.S. intelligence for relying too much on technology and neglecting human sources, McCloud believes that trend is turning around.

"It's always a trade off," McCloud said. While technology can provide incredibly detailed information, you still need human beings to tell you what the plan is, she said.

In the wake of the nation's shock and disbelief, McCloud remembers that it was not so long ago that guns were in place along the coast and Peninsula residents were told to use blackout blinds and drive without headlights.

"This is the day of infamy for a generation who doesn't have a memory of Pearl Harbor," McCloud said. "A lot of people lost their innocence Tuesday."

'They don't get intimidated'

Carini, a self-described "California boy" was also amazed at the demeanor he witnessed among New Yorkers during the crisis.

"I'm so impressed with Mayor Giuliani and the citizens. These are hard-core people; they don't get intimidated. There is no panic here. People are really mature. You see all kinds of nationalities — you wonder who you can trust — but everybody has a kind look."

Continuous bomb scares, including more than 90 on Thursday, according to ABC News, have made it impossible for New Yorkers to get back to normal, according to Carini. "Grand Central Station and all the buildings around it were evacuated after a bomb threat this morning," Carini told The Pine Cone by phone Sept. 13. "Each time there is another report of a bomb, it can put hundreds of thousands of people into the streets again."

Carini, in New York to attend a wedding Monday night with his daughter, Michelle, and his girlfriend, Pacific Grove resident Thalia Jennings, was supposed to rendezvous with friends at the ferry landing just outside the World Trade Center Tuesday morning. The rendezvous never happened.

"Michelle had just stepped out of the 19th Street subway when she saw the first jet smash into tower number one," he said.

'Wailing and crying out'

Jason Matthams, a 1999 graduate of RLS, said New Yorkers are trying to restore some semblance of normalcy to their lives, but it isn't easy when breathing masks and respirators are being handed out at the dorms.

"The smoke has been pretty bad since Wednesday, when the wind shifted. Everyone has a little mask," he said. And there's no device than can keep the horror of the world's worst terrorist attack from your mind.

Tuesday morning, he was on his way to class when he came to a spot on Sixth Avenue with a clear view of the World Trade Center, which was on fire. "It stunned me," Matthams said. "Everyone was standing there watching. A big crowd had gathered and was just staring when suddenly the first tower collapsed, and everyone started wailing and crying out. It was unreal. A huge river of people started coming uptown on foot. Ambulances and fire trucks were everywhere."

Matthams said he's ready for classes to resume. "They said it would be Friday, but that's what they said about today, too."

His dad, a prominent local home designer, hasn't asked his son to come home. "I don't think he should run away from it," said John Matthams. "As long as he's safe and he's comfortable with remaining in New York, I think it's very good that he stays."

LEO & AKILA Lefever, 16-plus and in the upper reaches of 9 respectively, are whirlwinds of activity on Carmel Beach, where they come daily. Neither is fond of toys, using each other for play, instead.

Despite taking a dozen photographs of these two playful siblings, the photo shown here is the only one in which both faces are clearly discernible; the others are of two dogs enmeshed in grapples and mock attacks, faces buried in each other's fur.

As you can see, black-coated Leo sports a dashing white mustache, white eyelashes, and one white spat on his front left foot (the essence of casual chic), while Akila has four white socks which she never has to pull up: knee-highs in front, anklets at the back.

Both of these beach lovers adore their Mom Mary and Dad Vern, but use Dad as the object of constant and instinctive herding activities at home and on outings. And heaven help Dad if he goes somewhere without them. It's scarcely worth it, he says, given the days of pouting to which he's then subjected.

At the beach, Akila will occasionally break away from the family group to make a bee-line for the top-o'-the-bluff bushes where she searches out those little sand squirrels, hoping to induce them to come out to play. When she's off on a sortie, Leo, "the con," continues to herd Dad up the beach, scanning oncoming beach walkers for a familiar face, hoping to mooch a free cookie. When Akila rejoins them, she resumes her share of the herding.

Salinas River's inflatable dam could soon become reality

By MARY BROWNFIELD

AN INGENUOUS plant to boost the Salinas Valley's water supply by installing an inflatable dam in the Salinas River and increasing the capacity of the Nacimiento Reservoir is making its way through the complicated permit and environmental review process, according to Monterey County Water Resources Agency General Manager Curtis Weeks.

The public comment period for the draft environmental impact report on the project closed Aug. 28, he said.

"The State Water Resources Control Board is pleased with the progress we've made thus far," Weeks said.

The county's plan involves two structural changes, according to Weeks: modifying the spillway at the Nacimiento Dam and building a rubber dam in the Salinas River to store water for groundwater recharge and agricultural uses.

The modified Nacimiento Dam spillway would capture an additional 10,000 acre-feet — water that could be released during dry months and recaptured by an inflatable dam in the river.

The dam would consist of a series of steel plates resting on a bladder that would be inflated in the spring and deflated in the winter, according to Weeks. When lowered, the plates would be covered by a layer of silt.

The 10,000 acre-feet of water stored by the inflatable dam would be pumped into 46 miles of Castroville Seawater Intrusion System pipeline, Weeks said. There, it would be blended with recycled water for agricultural use, which would stop the pumping in and around the coastal aquifers.

"If you're not pumping water out of them, then you're not drawing in seawater," he explained.

The bill

Weeks is buoyed by positive comments from water officials and the community, but acknowledged much work lies ahead. The county must find a way to pay for the $25 million project.

"But compared to other projects that ranged between $100 million and $400 million, this is a 'least-cost' project," he said.

This week, a study prepared for the California Public Utilities Commission said the Monterey Peninsula would have to spend $130 million to produce 7,730 acre-feet — about 15 times more per acre-foot than the cost of the Salinas River project.

A 19-member committee has been formed to find ways of paying for the project, according to Weeks, and he suspects some sort of direct assessment specifically for the Salinas Valley Water Project will be the likely result.

"We are really focused now on the process of how to allocate the cost through the Salinas Valley," he said. "That's probably the biggest step. Obviously the permits are not easy, but they have definitive steps. Working with the community to build up consensus to pay for this project is still going to take some work."

Permit hurdles abound

Since the plans involve construction within the river and reservoir, the project requires numerous environmental studies and permits from federal, state, regional and county agencies, according to Weeks.

Permission must be granted by the Army Corps of Engineers, the Division of Safety of Dams, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, the California Coastal Commission, the State Department of Fish and Game and the Regional Water Quality Control Board. The National Marine Fisheries Service and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service also participate in the environmental review.

Weeks said he expects the California Environmental Quality Act review of the project to be completed by the end of the year, and the feds' National Environmental Policy Act review to be finished in the first quarter of 2002.

"I'm kind of excited about the next six to nine months," Weeks said. "We'll face lots of really good challenges, but I think we have a community that's supportive."

Throughout the course of his research, Seavey found noteworthy structures of several important builders who hadn't been included in earlier research.

One builder, Carl Bensberg, worked in the Tudor revival style and specialized in the designs of Medieval northern Europe, often using clipped gables. Bensberg worked in the 1930s and 1940s and designed Mayor Sue McCloud's house.

Seavey is recommending that Bensberg's most prominent work, the stone cottage with the thatched roof across from the Carmel Mission, be included in the city's list of historic properties.

He was also impressed to find the work of several modern builders, including William Wurster, "a master of the modern who used vernacular forms of California architecture to devise an everyday modernism."

Other significant modern builders include Clarence Mayhew, Tom Elston and William Cranston, who worked during the post war years to provide "reasonable, comfortable and affordable" housing for returning veterans and their families.

One modern-style house that captured Seavey's attention is an experimental modular on Dolores and 11th created by Bob Stanton and Wallace Neff.

A series of units were fabricated off site and then transported by truck to the building location. "It was set up in such a way so you could add to them," Seavey said. "You build them on as modular connectors."

Stanton and Neff were convinced their modular design would have broad appeal, but it never became a big seller.

Now, the modular on Dolores and 11th is only one of two remaining examples of Stanton and Neff's experiment. The other is in Pacific Grove.

Historic districts?

While Seavey believes the entire town of Carmel could not qualify as one historic district — an idea supported by Sales — he did see opportunities for several thematic districts in the city.

Famed builders M.J. Murphy and Hugh Comstock would both be good candidates for a thematic district based on their work, in Seavey's opinion.

Seavey is also intrigued by the number of women builders working in Carmel "as opposed to other places I've been involved in," and believes there is an excellent case for a thematic district based on their work.

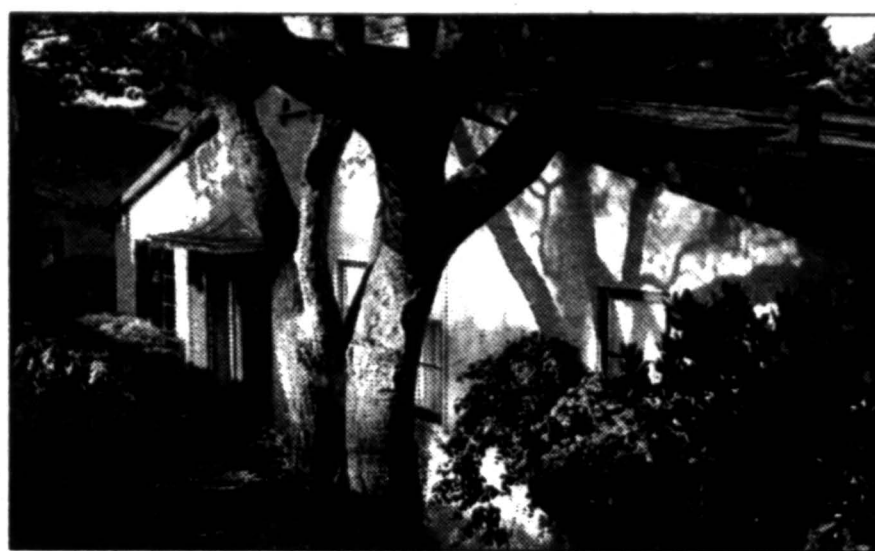

In addition, the area called Carmel's Tortilla Flats — "an area en route to the old stage route to Carmel from Monterey," near Guadalupe and Second — would also be a good candidate for a thematic district.

A thematic district could contain properties throughout town as long as they all represent a similar theme.

Seavey said he conducted his survey the old-fashioned way, by walking every block of the city.

The process was time consuming and called for an artful approach.

"Obviously you look at the buildings and if the buildings speak to you because they're of high quality or of a particular character, you want to look at them," Seavey said. "If they suggest age and/or style, then you go back and dig into files."

This Dolores Street house captured Seavey's attention as one of only two local examples of a modular house. The home's unique fabrication was a surprise to owner John Kerby-Miller.

At that point, Seavey could start asking the key questions: Is a house important because of its builder or owner? Is the building tied to significant events in history in general or in Carmel's history specifically?

Seavey's work will help the city put together a new historic preservation program which, in turn, will serve as an important document of the city's local coastal program.

The local coastal program will also consist of other recently completed documents, such as the commercial design guidelines and ordinances, a plan for management of the city's forest and beach, and the Design Traditions Project. When completed, the LCP will allow the homeowners to get permits for new homes or remodel projects directly from the city, without the necessity of getting separate permits from the California Coastal Commission.

HIDDEN TREASURE

Among the oaks, down a private road lies a hidden neighborhood of gems. Nestled between the trees, this 5 year old home invites you in with its rugged and casual beauty.

Enter into the open foyer to views of Castle Rock, Corral de Tierra, Calera Canyon and the Salinas Valley that continue throughout each room of this Santa Fe style home. It's open floor plan, high ceilings and natural slate floors invite all of the splendors of the setting into your everyday living. This 4 bedroom, 2 1/2 bath, 3000 square foot home has all of the amenities that you would need to be comfortable including dual heating and air conditioning, a 3 car garage, family room and a full security system.

Venture outside to take in the true beauty of the views from this 10.5 acre property and enjoy the large backyard with built-in barbecue and bocce ball court, there's even room for a pool. Down your private driveway is a complete workshop with storage for the handyman and a large fenced garden with raised beds and over a dozen fruit trees for the gardener. If you prefer tennis or horses, there's plenty of room for a court or corral. $1,800,000

Forest Theater gets a little piece of Sunset, albeit altered to fit

By MARY BROWNFIELD

THEATER AND movie buffs who flock to Carmel's Forest Theater to watch their favorite productions under the stars will soon be able to line up at a concession stand with a character of its own.

The stand at Sunset Center can now be hauled up to the Forest Theater and installed in place of the "temporary" snack shack that's been there since 1995, now that the Carmel Planning Commission unanimously approved the move without discussion Sept. 12.

The small structure — currently stucco (in keeping with Sunset Center's design) — will be covered with textured cedar plywood and battens to match the character of the other buildings at the theater and given a wood shake or shingle roof.

Acting planning director Chip Rerig admitted the changes constitute a demolition under city code since the new materials will cover more than half the exterior surfaces of the stand, but said no design guidelines exist for this type of project in that area and it requires no additional review.

The move had been planned since last spring as part of the Forest Theater Master Plan, when the Carmel City Council approved the idea of relocating the concession stand and set aside money for it.

But it still required planning commission approval, and the concept had to undergo historic review since the Forest Theater qualifies for listing on the National Register of Historic Places. According to acting planning director Chip Rerig's staff report, the theater "embodies unique qualities because of its association with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of history."

While the concession stand itself is not an historic structure, preservation consultant Kent Seavey advised the city that its changes and relocation "will actually improve the historic ambience of the theater" and therefore meets the Secretary of the Interior's Standards for the Treatment of Historic Properties, according to Rerig.

The city's historic preservation committee reviewed the plans last month and recommended the planning commission approve the move. Commissioners agreed, voting unanimously in favor of the project.

Singling out Carmel restaurants as feeling the pinch because of the temporary relocation of Bach Festival main concerts to Monterey in July and August, Carmel Business Association's executive director, Brenda Roncarati, said Sunset's closing caused a decrease in revenue by an estimated 4 to 17 percent. Roncarati based this estimate on a 20 percent response to an informal survey taken of 47 CBA restaurant members.

Myles Williams, a 30-year resident and Carmel businessman, noted that any future additions to Sunset Theater "will cost much more in the future than now." He urged the add alternatives be funded now. "We've got a great ball rolling now. Let's carry on," he said.

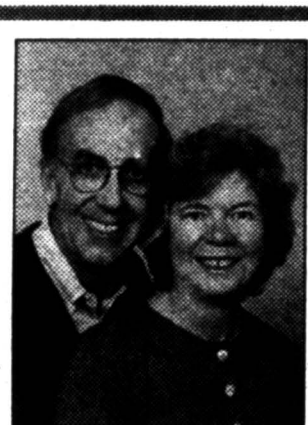

Subscriptions to the Carmel Music Society's 75th season are down about one-third, according to its president, Janet Brennan. She attributed the attrition directly to concerts taking place in Monterey while Sunset is closed down. "Our members are very fond of Sunset Center," she said.

Following unanimous council approval of the proposed funding strategy, Nancy and Bill Doolittle received a rousing round of applause for their fundraising efforts, with Mayor McCloud saying a resolution should be made to rename the couple "the Do-lots."

The council authorized sending a letter to Roebelen notifying the company that the city will accept its bid. That letter was sent to Roebelen Sept. 13, Guillen said.

Fun fundraiser set for Sept. 19

In the meantime, fundraising continues with a first annual "Carmel Fun Night" scavenger hunt Wednesday, Sept. 19, to benefit Sunset Center. It will be put on jointly by the Carmel Residents Association and Carmel Business Association. The scavenger hunt commences at Sunset Center terrace, San Carlos and Ninth Avenue, Carmel-by-the-Sea, at 5 p.m. with hors d'oeuvres and refreshments. The hunt will run from 5:45 p.m. to 7 p.m. with a mixed and silent auction to follow from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. The event is open to the public at $30 per reservation. EURICH ON REAL ESTATE

When you put your house on the market, take down that crystal chandelier you intend to use in your new house and replace it with a nice chandelier you don't mind selling. Otherwise the crystal one could be sold with the rest of the house.

Don't sell what you want to keep

A little-known "Law of Fixtures" says if an item of personal property is bolted, nailed, screwed, cemented, plastered, or built into a structure, it becomes a part of the property being sold. If the chandelier stays up, the buyer will think it's included in the sale. And unless it's specifically excluded, it legally stays with the house.

You can take your drapes, because they are not permanently attached to the building, but the rods that hold the drapes are screwed to the walls and they must stay. A wall-to-wall carpet is fastened to the floor, so it stays. But a rug that just rests on the floor goes to the new house with the seller.

Such items can become items of contention, and sales have been lost because buyers know that attached items are usually sold with the house, and they want an item that isn't for sale. Although the listing agreement may clearly state that something doesn't go with the house, buyers can include it in the contract anyway, hoping it will slip through, or become a point for further negotiations.

The law of fixtures is another reason why it pays to have a real estate professional market your home.

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE of LELA M. BROWN. Case Number MP 15708. To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors, and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, of LELA M. BROWN, also known as LELA MAY BROWN, aka Lela Brown. A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by EDWARD J. WATSON in the Superior Court of California,

County of MONTEREY. THE PETITION FOR PROBATE requests that EDWARD J. WATSON be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

THE PETITION requests the decedent's will and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate. The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by the court.

THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

A HEARING on the petition will be held on October 26, 2001 at 10:30 a.m., Dept. 14, in the Superior Court of California, County of Monterey, 1200 Aguajito Road, Monterey, CA 93940.

IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney. IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within four months from the date of first issuance of letters as provided in Probate Code section 9100. The time for filing claims will not expire before four months from the hearing date noticed above.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.
